TO HIS HIGHNESS the

DUKE of GLOUCESTER.

S I R,

AMONG all the Noble Presages of Wit and Honour, there is not One by which YOUR HIGHNESS hath given greater Encouragement to the Hopes of these Kingdoms, than by a surprising Curiosity, and impatient Desire of Knowledge. For the Satisfying of so Generous Inclinations, YOUR HIGHNESS cannot but seek an early Acquaintance with the Roman State.
It must needs please YOU, SIR, to understand the Constitution of that People, before YOU appear the Rival of their a 3 Glory :

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Glory: And the first Steps to both these Attainments will be alike uneasy. Many Fatigues are to be undergone ere You surpass them in Action and Conduct: And in the same Manner, before You are introduced into the more delightful Scenes of their Policy and Government, YOUR HIGHNESS should be first presented with the rougher Prospect of their Customs and Ceremonies.

FOR YOUR Direction in so noble (though intricate) a Path of Ancient Story, YOUR HIGHNESS is desired to accept this small Endeavour, no otherwise than YOU would a few Shadows, or a little Model, to give YOU, SIR, the first Notion of some admired Picture, or some magnificent Building.

THERE is one Custom which, I make myself believe, YOUR HIGHNESS will read

The Epistle Dedicatory

read with some Pleasure; I mean, Sid, the TROJAN GAME, a Martial Exercise, performed by the Youth of the first Quality in Rome, under such a Captain as YOURSELF; and deriving its Original from young Ascanius; whom I need not fear to mention as YOUR Precedent, since You have already honoured him with YOUR Imitation.

It may be expected, perhaps, that, out of the many illustrious Romans, I should here propose to YOUR HIGHNESS some of the most celebrated Examples of Virtue and great Atchievements. But this would prove a needless Piece of Service; since You cannot miss YOUR Way in the Pursuit of the First, while YOUR HIGHNESS goes on like the Trojan Prince,

Matre Dea monstrante Viam.

And to the Second, the short Advice,

The Epistle Dedicatory.

which that Hero gave his Son, will engage You as the Higheſt Motive :

—Te animo repententem exempla tuorum,
Et Pater Æneas & Avunculus excitet Hector.

I am, S I R,

YOUR HIGHNESS'S

Moſt humble and

Moſt obedient Servant,

Baſil Kennett.

P R E F A C E.

 HE Usefulness of such a Design as this not being like to be called in question, I am obliged no farther than to give a short History of what Attempts have hitherto been made of the same Nature, with some Account of the present Undertaking.

Not to make a Catalogue of the many Tracts on particular Subjects of Roman Antiquities, the Two Authors most in use for this Knowledge are Rosinus and Godwin; the first as a full System, the other as an Abridgement or Compendium. We have nothing more complete than Rosinus taken all together: But he will appear very deficient in many Points, if compared with other learned Men, who have laboured in the adorning some one Part of his General Subject. Thus, I believe, his Book of War has scarce been looked into since the Publishing of Lipsius's admirable Comment on Polybius. His Accounts of the Habits, Senate, Laws and Funerals, will never be set in Competition with the more accurate Pieces of Ferrarius and Rubenius, of Paulus Manutius and Kirchman. Not to urge that the Names, the Money, the Private Games, with several lesser Topicks, are entirely omitted; and many more substantial Customs but lightly touched. The Paralipomena of Dempster, which are added in the best Editions, under the Name of Notes on this Author, seem, for the most Part, barely a Transcript of Common Places gathered from the Classics and other Writers, with little Connection; and therefore, though they serve, now and then, for a Supplement to Rosinus, yet it is impossible they should be very instructive.

Godwin's Anthologia (which we usually meet with in our Schools, besides that it wants all the Advantages which we have received from the Learned within these threescore Years, is so short and unsatisfactory in Subjects of the greatest Consequence; so crowded with Phrases, which are to be found in all our Dictionaries; so stuffed with long Passages of Latin untranslated; has so little Method, and runs so dry and heavy in the Reading, that I fancy, it is a general Wish, it were exchanged for something else in the same Kind, of greater Use, and more agreeable Entertainment.

For Cantelius de Romana Republica, To me the Jesuit seems very unhappy, that by spending half his Book in giving us a long Relation of the Roman Wars, Battles, Deaths, &c. which most Persons would rather learn from the Original Historians, he has so straitened himself in the remaining Part, as to pass for no extraordinary Epitomizer. Besides that, he cannot spare Room to set down one Word of Authority for what he says.

As for These Papers: The Two Essays of the Roman Learning and Education are, I think, what has not been before attempted in any Language; and on that Account will be the more easily pardoned, if not the better accepted in the World. The compen-

compendious History of the Rise, Progress, and Decay of the State, has this at least to say for itself, That it carries its own Credentials along with it, in constant References to the ancient Writers. I will not here compose a Table of Contents for the Second Part, which has run out into such a Length, as to make the Body of the Work; only I may hint in a Word or two, that the many Omissions of Rosinus and Godwin are largely supplied, and scarce any Thing material (that I know of) passed by: That the City, with the famous Structures of all Sorts, are described from the Relations of Eye-witnesses, and Authors of Credit: That the Laws which occur in the best Classicks; and often prove a great Hinderance to the Reader, are disposed under proper Heads in a very convenient Manner; and the truest Accounts of their Import, and the Time when they were made, collected from the most approved Commentators, and from the admired Treatise of Manutius de Legibus Romanis: That in some Subjects it was thought proper to follow (for the most Part) one particular Author, who had managed his Province with universal Approbation; as Sigonius in the Comitia and the Judgements: Lipsius in the Art of War, in the Gladiators, and in the Names: Kirchman in the Funerals, and Brerewood in the Account of the Money: That the curious Remarks of Scaliger, Casaubon, Grævius, Monsieur and Madame Dacier, are inserted on many Occasions. In short, that no Pains or Charges have been spared, which might render the Attempt truly servicable to the good End for which it was designed, the Pleasure and Benefit of the Reader.

The

P R E F A C E.

The great Incorrectness of the Second Edition was occasioned by the Haste, and the Necessities, of the then unfortunate Proprietor; from whom no Sight of the Sheets could be obtained, till the Whole was so dishonourably finished. Yet the necessary Alterations and Additions, before given in, were inserted in their Places. It was and is with all Gratitude acknowledged, that the best Part of this Assistance hath been afforded by the late Noble Collections of the excellent Grævius; a Catalogue of which is here subjoined. The Compiler wishes it may be imputed not to Idleness, but to Design, that he hath borrowed only a Mite from that Treasury. For intending an Abridgement, not a full Body, he thought it alike unreasonable, either to swell the Bulk above the Name and Use, or to forbear such Improvements, as could scarce in Honesty be denied: Either to burthen the Reader for the Bookseller's Advantage, or, under a Pretence of easing the former, to injure Both. This new Impression has not only been amended by a careful Supervisal, but adorned by the Beauty of the Letter, and of the additional Sculptures. But the chief Recommendation of the Design is owing to the favourable Acceptance and kin.^d Encouragement of private Persons, and of Societies, especially of a Royal and most flourishing Seminary, to which our Thanks can be returned in no better Wishes, than that it may for ever continue in the same happy State, and under the like prudent Government and Direction.

ESSAY I.

Of the ROMAN Learning.

HOEVER considers the strange Beginning of the Roman State, the Frame and Constitution on which it was first settled, together with the Quality of the original Members, will think it no Wonder that the People, in that early Age, should have a Kind of Fierceness, or rather Wildness in their Temper, utterly averse to every Thing that was polite and agreeable. This savage Disposition by Degrees turned into a rigid Severity, which encouraged them to rely solely on the Force of their Native Virtue and Honour, without being beholden to the Advantage of Art, for the Improvement of their Reason, or for the Assistance of their Courage. Hence a Grossness of Invention passed current with them for Wit, and Study was looked on as an unmanly Labour; especially while they found, that their exact Discipline and unconquered Resolution, rendered them Masters of Nations much more knowing than themselves. All this is frankly acknowledged by their own Authors: Literæ in homine Romano go for a Wonder with Tully (a.) And Virgil, in a Reign when all the Civility and Learning of the World were transplanted to Rome, chuseish to make the Arts of Government and War the distinguishing Excellencies of his Countrymen:

*Excudent alii spirantia mollius æra,
Credo equidem: vivos ducent de marmore vultus:
Orabunt causas melius; cœlique meatus
Describent radio, & surgentia sidera dicent:
Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento:*

Hæ tibi erunt artes ; pacisque imponere morem, Parcere subjectis, & debellare superbos (a).

Others shall best inspire the mimic Brass,
Or out of Marble carve a living Face ;
Plead with more Force, and trace the heavenly Roads,
Describing the wide Empire of the Gods :
The wand'ring Stars to steady Rules confine,
And teach expecting Mortals when they'll shine.
Thee Heavens, brave Roman, form'd for high Command ;
Be these thy Arts, from thy victorious Hand
To make glad Nations own their Peace bestow'd,
To spare the Suppliant, and pull down the Proud.

The Reasons, which Horace gives for the slow Advances of Poësy, will hold in every other Part of polite Learning :

Serus enim Græcis admovit acumina chartis (b).

Their little Acquaintance with the fine Wits of Greece, who had settled the Staple of Arts and Learning in that Country, deprived them of an Opportunity to cultivate and beautify their Genius, which was formed by Nature capable of the highest Attainments. Some Kind of Poëtry, indeed, they had in their rustick Times ; but then the Verses were such rude doggrel Stuff, as old Emmius describes :

——— *Qualis Fauni vatesque canchant,
Quum neque Musarum scopulos quisquam superarat,
Nec dicti studiosus erat.*

Cicero is inclined to think, that the old Romans might probably have gained some little Knowledge in Philosophy from the Instructions of Pythagoras, the famous Author of the Italic Sect, who flourished in Italy about the same Time as the Tar- quins were expelled the City. But the ancient Custom of Singing to the Flute the Praises of famous Men at great Entertainments, is the only Relick he can find of this Doctrine which was delivered in Poetical Numbers (c).

Their Intercourse with Greece began upon their Undertaking the Defence of that Country, against Philip of Macedon, who had a Design on its Liberty, about the Year of Rome 555 ;

(a) Æneid, 6.

(b) Lib. 2. Epist. 1.

when,

when, according to their usual Practice, under the Name of Deliverers, they made themselves rather the Masters of that People. And then

Græcia capta ferum victorem cepit, & artes Intulit agresti Latio (a).

The greatest Number of eminent Poets, especially Dramatick Writers, flourished between the End of the First and the Third Punic Wars; or from the Year of the City 512 to 607. The most considerable were Livius Andronicus, Nævius, Ennius, Pacuvius, Accius, Cæcilius, Plautus, Afranius, Terence, and Lucilius. And therefore Horace means only the first Punic War, when he says,

*Et post Punica bella quietus, quarere cœpit,
Quid Sophocles, & Thespis, & Æschylus utile ferrent:
Tentavit quoque, rem si dignè vertere posset (b).*

The Studies of Philosophy and Rhetoric never made any tolerable Progress before the Arrival of the Achaïans, who in the Year of Rome 586, or 587, to the Number of a Thousand or more, were sent for out of their own Country, where they had shown themselves disaffected to the Romans, and were dispersed in several Parts of Italy. Among these was the famous Polybius, the Megalopolitan, whose great Parts and Learning not only gained him the entire Friendship of Scipio Æmilianus and Lælius, two of the greatest Romans in that Age, but procured too the Release of all his Countrymen that remained after some Years Exile.

Most of that Company, though not equal to Polybius, yet being the principal Members of the chief Cities in Greece, brought away a great Shares of the Politeness and refined Arts of that Country: And being now reduced to a State of Life, which took from them all Thoughts of Publick Action, they applied themselves wholly to the Pursuit of Letters, as well to divert the sad Reflexions of their Banishment, as to improve and cultivate their Minds (c).

In a few Years their Examples and Instructions had wrought such a strange Conversion in the Roman Youth, that the Senate, fearing lest the ancient Discipline should by this Means be corrupted, and the Minds of the People softened and enervated by Study, consulted how to put a Stop to this Vain of Politeness, so contrary to the rough and warlike Dispositions of their Ancestors. To this Purpose we meet with a Decree bearing Date in the Consulship of C. Fannius Strabo and M. Valerius Messala, A. U. C. 392; by which it appears, that, whereas Marcus Pomponius the Prætor had made a Report to the Senate about the Philosophers and Rhetoricians, the Fathers did hereby order the said Prætor to take Cognizance of the Business, and to suffer no such Men in Rome (a).

(a) Lib. 2. Epist. 1. (b) Ibid. (c) Confabon, Cærenol. ad Polyb. & Comment. ad Sæsten. de Gramma.

The eager Passion for Learning, which this Prohibition had in some Measure allayed, broke out with greater Heat and Force about sixteen Years after, upon this famous Occasion, as the Story may be made up of several Authors (b).

The Athenians having plundered Oropus, a City of Bœotia, the Inhabitants made their Complaint at Rome; the Romans referring the Case to the Judgment of the Sicyonians, a Mulct of 500 Talents was imposed on the Athenian State. Upon this Account it was resolved, that Commissioners should be sent to the Roman Senate, to procure a Mitigation of the Fine. The Persons pitched on for the Service were Carneades the Academick, Diogenes the Stoick, and Critolaus the Peripatetick. About the Time of their Coming, Authors are very little agreed; but Petavius and Cassaubon fix it in the Six Hundred and Third Year after the Building of Rome. Most of the studious Youths immediately waited on the old Gentlemen at their Arrival, and heard them discourse frequently with Admiration. It happened too, that they had each of them a different Way in their Harangues; for the Eloquence of Carneades was violent and rapid, Critolaus's neat and smooth, that of Diogenes modest and sober. Carneades one Day held a full and accurate Disputation concerning Justice; the next Day he refuted all that he had said before by a Train of contrary Arguments, and quite took away the Virtue that he seemed so firmly to have established. This he did to shew his Faculty of confuting all Manner of positive Assertions; for he was the Founder of the Second Academy, a Sect which denied that any Thing was to be perceived or understood in the World, and so introduced an universal Suspension of Assent. It soon flew about the City that a certain Græcian (by whom they meant Carneades) carrying all before him, had impressed so strange a Love upon the young Men, that, quitting all their Pleasures and Pastimes, they run mad, as it were, after Philosophy. This to the Generality of People was a very pleasant Sight, and they rejoiced extremely to find their Sons welcome the Græcian Literature in so kind a Manner. But old Cato the Censor took it much to Heart, fearing lest the Youth, being diverted by such Entertainments, should prefer the Glory of Speaking to that of Acting. So that, the Fame of the Philosophers increasing every Day, he resolved to send them packing as soon as possible. With this Design, coming into the Senate, he accused the Magistrates for not giving the Ambassadors a speedier Dispatch; they being Persons who could easily persuade the People to what they pleased. He advised therefore, that in all Haste something should be concluded on, that, being sent Home to their own Schools, they might declaim to the Græcian Children, and the Roman Youth might be obedient to their own Laws and Governors, as formerly.

The same grave Disciplinarian, to fright his Son from any Thing of the Græcians, used to pronounce, like the Voice of an Oracle, in an harsher and louder Tone than ordinary, That the Romans would certainly be destroyed, when they began once to be infected with Greek. But it is very likely that he afterwards altered his Mind; since his learning Greek in his old Age is a known Story, and depends on good Authority (a). The Lord Bacon says, It was a Judgment upon him for his former Blasphemies (b).

The Ambassadors, upon the Motion of Cato, had a quick Dismission, but left so happy an Inclination in the young Gentlemen to Philosophy and good Letters, that they grew every Day more enamoured of Study; and showed as much Diligence in their Pursuits of Knowledge as they had ever done in their Applications to War.

In the Year of the City 608 or 609, Greece, which had hitherto retained some Shadow of Liberty, though it had been a long while at the Romans Command, was, upon some slight Occasion, entered with an Army under L. Mummius, and reduced to the common State of the other conquered Nations. This Exploit happening in the very same Year that Carthage was destroyed by P. Scipio Æmilianus, it will be very pleasant to observe the different Genius of the two Commanders, who had the Honour of these Atchievements; and to see how Politeness and the ancient Simplicity were now at Strife in Rome. Mummius was so far unskilled in the curious Inventions of Art, that after the taking of Corinth, when a great Number of admirable Pictures and Statues, by the best Masters, came into his Hands, he told the Servants that were to carry them into Italy, If they lost any by the Way, they should certainly find him new ones in their room (a).

Scipio, on the other Hand, to the Courage and Virtue of ancient Heroes, had joined a profound Knowledge of the Sciences, with all the Graces and Ornaments of Wit. His Patronage was courted by every one that made any Figure in Learning. *Panæti*us, whom Tully calls the Prince of the Stoicks, and the incomparable Historian *Polybi*us, were his Bosom Friends, the Assistants of his Studies at Home, and the constant Companions of his Expeditions (b.) To which may be added the Remark of a very great Man, That he passed the soft Hours of his Life in the Conversation of Terence, and was thought to have a Part in the Composition of his Comedies (c).

The highest Pitch of the Roman Grandeur, in the Time of the Commonwealth, is thought to have been concluded before the final Reduction of Carthage and of Greece (d); and the common Reason assigned for its Decay, is, that Athens, being now become the Mart of the World for Wit and Breeding, imported the Arts of Debauchery among her more noble Productions, to Rome; and maintained their Luxury, as well as their Studies and Conversations, at her Charge. But, however their ancient Prowess might decline, it is certain the Conquest of the great Empire of Science was now carried on more vigorously than ever. The Tide of Learning and Humanity ran every Day with greater Force, and, after the famous Cato, scarce met with any to oppose it. Between this Period and the Death of Sylla (scarce Seventy Years) the most renowned Orators, *Cra*ssus and Antony, ruled the Forum, who were succeeded by *Sulpici*us, Cotta, Hortensius, and other great Names recorded by Tully in his Brutus. At the same Time, the two *Scævola*s, the Augur and the Pontiff, advanced Civil Law to its full Perfection. And Lucretius, (who wrote about the Time of the Jugurthine War) as he excelled even the Græcian Disciples of Epicurus, in explaining and defending his Doctrine, so he directs us where to begin, in fixing the Height and Purity of the Roman Poetry and Style (e). Philosophers were now in universal Honour and Request, being invited from all Parts for the Education and Instruction of young Noblemen, and for Advice and Assistance of the greatest Ministers of State. And, what is most surprizing, Arts and Civility were rather encouraged than frightened away by the Wars, and the Muses, like their Patroness Minerva, had very often their Residence in the Camp. Sylla himself wrote two and twenty Books of Memoirs (a), and contributed in an extraordinary Manner to the Advancement of Knowledge, by transporting to Rome the famous Library of Apellicon the Peripatetick, in which were most of Aristotle's and Theophrastus's Works, which had been long unknown to the greatest Part of their Followers (b).

Sylla's Rival, Marius, was the only Man of Note, in that Age, who retained the old Sourness and unpolished Manner of the first Romans. He indeed would never study Greek, nor suffer that Language to be used in any Matters of Consequence; as thinking it ridiculous to bestow Time in that Learning, the Teachers whereof were little better than Slaves (c).

But then Lucullus, who succeeded Sylla in the Military Glory, as to Matters of Learning, was much his Superior. In his Youth he had so absolute a Command of the Two only Tongues then in Request, that, upon a Project of compiling an History, he fairly took his Chance, whether he should write in Greek or Latin, in Prose or Verse. And after all his Feats of Arms in the Mithridatick War, when he was deprived of his Command by the prevailing Faction of Pompey, the great Employment of his Privacy and Retreat was the promoting of Knowledge. With this Design he built a Library, furnished it with a vast Number of Books fairly transcribed, and made it free to all Comers. The Walks and Schools, which he raised near the Library, were always full of Græcians, who, retiring thither from Business, diverted one another with Conferences and Debates, in the same Manner as was used in their own Country; making Advantage of friendly Conversation toward the Improvement of their Understandings. Lucullus himself often studied there, sometimes disputing with the learned Men, and sometimes giving his Advice in Matters of State, to those that desired it; though he meddled with no publick Business in Person. He was very well versed in all the Sects of Philosophy, but adhered closely to the old Academy, whereas his Friend Cicero was a great Stickler for the new. Hence it is that we find the latter Book of the Academick Questions inscribed Lucullus; where that great Man is brought in defending the Opinions of his Sect (d).

(a) Plutarchus in Sylla. (b) Ibid. & Sprobo, lib. 23. (c) Plutarchus in Marius. (d) Plutarchus in Lucullus.

The whole Majesty of Language and Height of Eloquence, shone out, as it were, all at once, in Tully; so that Paterculus has well observed, Delectari ante eum paucissimis, mirari vero neminem possis, nisi aut ab illo visum, aut qui illum viderit (a).

Perhaps the same Remark will hold good in his Philosophy; or, at least, with Respect to his Prédecessors, the latter Study will yield him an equal Praise with the former. For to handle this Subject in Latin Prose was purely a new Province reserved for his Management, and left untouched till that Time by the Learned. Thus much he lets us know in several Parts of his Works, particularly in his Poem to the Tuscan Questions; where at the same Time he gives us a short Account of the Progress and Advances of Arts among the Romans, infinitely worth the transcribing: Meum semper judicium fuit, &c. It was always my Opinion, says he, That either our Countrymen have been more happy in their Inventions of every Kind, than the Greeks; or, That they have made a vast Improvement in whatever they borrowed from that Nation, and thought worth their while to polish and refine. For as to the Conduct of Life, and the Rules of Breeding and Behaviour, together with the Management of Family Concerns, we are Masters of more Exactness, and have a much genteeler Air. If we ascend to the Governing and Regulating of publick Spirits, our Ancestors may justly claim the Preference in this Part of Wisdom, on Account of their admirable Laws and Institutions. In military Affairs we have made a more considerable Advance than any before us, which is owing no less to our Discipline, than to our native Bravery.

It is true, Greece has always had the Reputation beyond us for their Attainments in every Part of Learning, and it was an easy Matter to conquer, when they met with no Opposition. Poetry, the most ancient Sort of Writing, had but a late Reception among us: For Livius Andronicus presented his first Dramatick Piece 510 (it should be 514) Years after the Building of Rome, in the Consulship of C. Claudius, Son to Appius Cæcus, and M. Tuditanus, a Year before the Birth of Ennius, who is Senior to Plautus and Nævius.

As he goes on, he attributes the slow Progress of Poesy to the Want of due Reward and Encouragement, and tells us, that, in a publick Oration of Cato's, it was objected as a Reproach to Marcus Nobilior, that he had carried the Poet Ennius with him into Ætolia, when he went to reside there as Governor: That there was no Part of the Mathematicks (which the Graecians esteemed so honourable a Study) of Use in Rome; but the bare Practice of Measuring, and casting Accompts. For Oratory, he observes, that the Romans embraced this very soon, but at first without the Advantages of a learned Institution; which were afterwards added with so much Success, as to set them on equal Terms with the most eloquent Masters of Greece: But that Philosophy had lain neglected till that Time, and had met with no eminent Author to adorn it in the Latin Tongue. This therefore he professeth to undertake as his proper Office; and, how happily he succeeded in the Attempt, his Works on that Subject will be a lasting Argument.

If we compare Tully with his Friend Atticus, we find them both together answering the two excellent Ends of Philosophy, the Service of the Publick, and the private Ease and Tranquillity of an inoffensive Life: The former directed all his Studies to Action, in the Defence of the Commonwealth, and the Opposing all Designs on its Liberty: The latter, by never entering the Scene of Business, made himself equally honoured and courted by all Parties, from Sylla to Augustus Cæsar. The one gained to himself more Glory, the other more hearty Love and Esteem; and I believe most Persons would be inclined to follow Atticus, and to commend Cicero.

Crassus, Pompey, Antony, Cæsar, Cato and Brutus, who made such a Noise in the World, almost all at the same Time, were the most refined Scholars of their Age. The three first indeed confined themselves to the Practice of Eloquence, till they were wholly diverted by the Profession of Arms. But the three last, as they outshone the former in Oratory, so they had made much greater Advances in the other Parts of human Learning. Poetry and Philosophy were the Diversion of Cæsar's leisure Hours; and his History will be the Model of good Language, and long as himself is the Example of great Achievements.

The whole Conduct of Cato's Life shows him a greater Stoick than the most rigid Professors of that Sect; or, however they might equal him in Knowledge, it is certain he shamed them in Practice.

Brutus had been a Hearer of all the Sects of Philosophers, and made some Proficiency in every one. When a Soldier under Pompey, in the Civil Wars, all the Time that he was in the Camp, except what he spent in the General's Company, he employed in Reading and Study. And the very Day before the decisive Battle at Pharsalia, though it was then the Middle of Summer, and the Camp under many Inconveniencies, and he himself extremely harrassed and out of Order; yet while others were either laid down to sleep, or taken up with Apprehensions about the Issue of the Fight, he spent all his Time, till the Evening, in writing the Epitome of Polybius (a).

It is universally known, that the Roman Literature, as well as Empire, was in its highest Ascendant under Augustus. All the delicate Fruits, transplanted from Greece, were now in their Blossom, being cherished by the Calmness of the Season, and cultivated by the Hand of an Emperor.

I have often wondered that Mæcenas should all along carry away the sole Honour of encouraging the Wit and Knowledge of this Reign; when it seems probable that he acted only in Imitation of his Master; as the Humours of Princes commonly determine the Inclination of their Favourites. The quite contrary happened to the other great Minister Agrippa; the Glory of his Exploits was referred to the Emperor, whilst the Emperor's Bounty advanced Mæcenas's Esteem. And, indeed, the Celebration of Augustus's Triumphs and the Panegyricks on his Piety were sufficient to set him out in the most taking Colours: But, had Mæcenas been denied the shining Character of a Patron, he might have rolled on in Silence among Epicurus's Herd, and we should scarce have seen him drawn by the Poets Hands, unless in the same Posture as Silenus:

Inflatum hesternò venas, ut semper, Iaccho:
Serta procul capiti tantùm delapsa jacebant,
Et gravis attritâ pendebat cantbarus ansâ (b).

But, whichever of the two was the nobler Patron, Augustus must be acknowledged to have been the greatest Scholar. And, for Proof, we need go no farther than Suetonius, who has spent no less than six Chapters on the Learning of this Emperor. His prodigious Industry in the Study of Eloquence and liberal Arts; his Labour in composing every Thing that he spoke in Publick, though he had a very good Faculty at extempore Harangues; his polite and clear Style; his accurate Knowledge of the Græcian Literature, by the Assistance of their best Masters of Rhetorick and Philosophy; the Thirteenth Book of the History of his own Life; his Exhortation to Philosophy, with several other Works in Prose; his Book of Hexameters, and another of Epigrams, all considered together, may equal him with the most learned Princes in Story.

Being thus arrived at the highest Point of the Roman Attainments, it cannot be unpleasant to look about us, and to take a short Survey of the Productions in every Kind. Eloquence indeed will appear at some Distance, rather in the Augustan Age, than in Augustus's Reign, ending in Cicero, at the Dissolution of the Commonwealth. Not that his Death was properly the Ruin of his Profession; for the Philosopher might have lived much longer; and yet the Orator have been gone, when once the ancient Liberty was taken away, which inspired him with all his lofty Thoughts, and was the very Soul of his Harangues. But then the Bounds of History and Poesy were fixed under the Emperor's Protection, by Livy, Virgil and Horace. And, if we desire a View of Philosophy, the two Poets will account for that as well as for their own Province.

I think none will deny Horace the Elogy given him by a celebrated Writer, That he was the greatest Master of Life, and of true Sense in the Conduct of it (a). Especially since the Author of that Judgment is one of those whom (had he lived then) Horace himself would have willingly chose for his Judge; and inserted in that short Catalogue of Men of Wit and Honour, whom he desired should approve his Labours (b).

Whether or no the common Saying be true, that, if all Arts and Sciences were lost, they might be found in Virgil, it is plain he dived very deep into the Mysteries of natural Science, which he sets forth in all its Ornaments, in several Parts of his sublime Work. And in that admirable Place of his second Georgic, when he expresseth, in a Sort of Transport, his Inclinations to Poesy, he seems to direct its whole End towards the Speculations of the Philosophers, and to make the Muses Hand-maids to Nature:

*Me verò primum dulces ante omnia Musæ,
Quarum sacra fero ingenti percussus amore,
Accipiant; cælique vias & sidera monstrant,
Defectus Solis varios, Lunæque labores:*

*Unde tremor terris : quâ vi maria alta tumescant
Obicibus ruptis, rursusque, in seipsâ residant :
Quid tantum Oceano properent se tingere soles
Hyberni : vel quæ tardis mora noctibus obstet.*

For me, the first Desire which does entroul
All the inferior Wheels that move my Soul;
Is, that the Muse me her High-priest would make ;
Into her Holy Scenes of Mytery take,
And open there, to my Mind's purged Eye,
Those Wonders which to Sense the Gods deny ;
How in the Moon such Change of Shapes is found :
The Moon, the changing World's eternal Bound :
What shakes the solid Earth : What strong Disease
Dares trouble the far Center's ancient Ease :
What makes the Sea retreat, and what advance ;
Varieties too regular for Chance :
What drives the Chariot on of Winter's Light,
And stops the lazy Waggon of the Night.

Mr. Cowley.

After Augustus, the Roman Muses, as well as the Eagles, stooped from their former Height ; and perhaps one of these Misfortunes might be a necessary Consequence of the other. I am very sorry when I find either of them attributed to the Change of Government, and the Settlement of the Monarchy : For, had the Maxims and the Example of Augustus been pursued by his Successors, the Empire, in all Probability, might have been much more glorious than the Commonwealth. But while a new Scheme of Politicks was introduced by Tiberius, and the Cæsars began to act what the Tarquins would have been ashamed of, the Learning might very well be corrupted, together with the Manners and the Discipline, and all beyond any Hopes of a Recovery.

It cannot be denied, that some of the worst Princes were the most passionate Affecters of Learning, particularly Tiberius, Claudius, and Nero : But this rather deterred other Men from such Attempts, than encouraged them in their Pursuits ; while an applauded Scholar was as much envied, as a fortunate Commander ; and a Rival in Wit accounted as dangerous as a Contender for the Empire ; the first being certainly the more hard Combatant, who dared challenge his Masters at their own Weapons.

Whatever

Whatever Effays were made to recover the languishing Art under Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian (for this last too was an Encourager of Poesy, though he banished the Philosophers) scarce served to any better Purpose, than to demonstrate the poor Success of Study and Application, while the ancient Genius was waning.

In the six next Reigns immediately following Domitian, Learning seems to have enjoyed a Sort of lucid Interval, and the banished Favourite was again admitted to the Court, being highly countenanced and applauded by the best Set of Princes Rome ever saw.

Not to enquire after the Productions of the other Reigns, the useful Labours of Tacitus, Suetonius, and Pliny Junier, will make the Government of Trajan more famous than all his Feats of Arms. If they are less happy in their Language than the Ancients, in other Respects, perhaps, they have overmatched them; the Historians in the Delicacy of their Politicks, and the sincere Truth of their Relations; and the Orator in his Wit and good Sense. If we add to these Plutarch, who wrote most of his Works in Rome, and was honoured by Trajan with the Consulship; and Quintilian, who flourished a very little Time before, they may pass for the Twilight of Learning after the Sun-set of the Augustan Age, or rather be resembled to a glimmering Taper, which casts a double Light when it is just on the Point of expiring.

It is an Observation of Sir William Temple, That all the Latin Books, which we have 'till the End of Trajan, and all the Greek 'till the End of Marcus Antoninus, have true and very estimable Value; but that all, written since that Time, owe their Price purely to our Curiosity, and not their own Worth and Excellence.

But the Purity of the Tongue was long before corrupted, and ended, in Sir William Temple's Judgment, with Velleius Paterculus under Tiberius. The Reason he assigns for this Decay is the strange Resort of the ruder Nations to Rome, after the Conquest of their own Country.

Thus the Gauls and Germans flocked in Multitudes both to the Army and the City, after the Reducing of those Parts by Julius Cæsar, Augustus, and Tiberius; as many Spaniards and Syrians had done before, on the like Account: But the greatest Confluence of Foreigners followed upon the Victories of Trajan in the East, and his Establishment of the three new Provinces, Armenia, Assyria, and Mesopotamia. And, though Adrian voluntarily humbly relinquished these new Acquisitions, yet the prodigious Swarms of the Natives, who had waited on his Predecessors Triumphs, were still obliged to live in Rome, in the Condition of Slaves.

The greatest Part of the succeeding Princes, who found it so hard an Enterprize to defend their own Territories, had little Leisure or Concern to guard the Possessions of the Muses. And therefore Claudian, in those Verses of his Panegyrick on Stilico,

*Hinc priscae redeunt artes, felicibus inde
Ingeniis aperitur iter, despectaque Musæ Colla levant;*

is guilty of a great Piece of Flattery, in making that Minister the Restorer of polite Studies; when it is plain, that in his Time (under Honorius) were the last Strugglings of the Roman State.

The Goths and Vandals, who soon carried all before them, might easily fright Learning and Sciences off the Stage, since they were already so much out of Countenance; and thus render the Conquerors of the Universe as rough and illiterate as their first Progenitors.

In this Manner the Inundations of these barbarous People proved equally fatal to Arts and Empire; and Rome herself, when she ceased to be the Mistress of the World, in a little Time quite forgot to speak Latin.

E S S A Y II.

Of the ROMAN Education.

IT is an obvious Remark, that the strongest Body owes its Vigour, in a great Measure, to the very Milk it received in its Infancy, and to the first Knitting of the Joints: That the most stately Trees, and the fairest Herbs and Flowers, are beholden for their Shade and Beauty to the Hand that first fixed them in an agreeable Soil: An Advantage, which, if they happen to want, they seldom fail to degenerate into Wildness, and to assume a Nature quite different from their proper Species. Every one knows how to apply the same Observation to Morals, who has the Sense to discover it in Naturals. Hence the most renowned People, in Story, are those whose Lawgivers thought it their noblest and most important Work to prescribe Rules for the early Institution of Youth. On this Basis Lycurgus founded the glorious Discipline of the Spartans, which continued for five hundred Years, without any considerable Violation. The Indian Brachmans had a Strain beyond all the Wit of Greece, beginning their Care of Mankind even before their Birth, and employing much Thought and Diligence about the Diet and Entertainment of their breeding Women; so as to furnish them with pleasant Imaginations, to compose their Minds and their Sleep with the best Temper, during the Time that they carried their Burthen (a).

Plutarch severely reprehends the Conduct of Numa, that, in his Settlement of the Roman State, he did not in the first Place provide and constitute Rules for the Education of Children; and makes the Remissness in this early Discipline the chief Cause of the seditious and turbulent Temper of that People, and what contributed highly to the Ruin of the Commonwealth (a). Thus much indeed seems to be agreed on by the latter Historians, That, in the looser Times of the Empire, the shameful Negligence of Parents and Instructors, with its necessary Consequence, the Corruption and Decay of Morality and good Letters, struck a very great Blow towards the Dissolving of that glorious Fabrick. But in the rising Ages of Rome, while their primitive Integrity and Virtue flourished with their Arms and Command, the Training up of Youth was looked on as a most Sacred Duty; and they thought themselves in the highest Manner obliged to leave fit Successors to the Empire of the World. So that, upon a short Survey of the whole Method of Discipline from the Birth to the Entrance on public Business, they will appear so far to have exceeded the Wisdom and Care of other Nations, as to contend for this Glory, even with the ancient Spartans, whom Plutarch has magnified so much beyond them: Especially if we agree with a great Judge, That the Taking no Care about the Learning, but only about the Lives and Manners of Children, may be justly thought a Defect in Lycurgus's Institution (b).

Quintilian (or Tacitus) in the Dialogue de Oratoribus, gives an excellent Account of the old Way of breeding Children, and sets it off with great Advantage, by comparing it with the Modern:

“ As soon as the Child was born, he was not given in Charge
 “ to an hired Nurse, to live with her in some pitiful Hole that “ served her for Lodgings, but was brought up in the Lap and “ Bosom of the Mother, who reckoned it among her chief “ Commendations, to keep the House, and to attend on the “ Children. Some ancient Matron was pitched on out of the “ Neighbours, whose Life and Manners rendered her worthy
 “ of that Office, to whose Care the Children of every Family “ were committed; before whom it was reckoned the most “ heinous Thing in the World, to speak an ill Word, or to do
 “ an ill Action. Nor had she an Eye only on their Instruction,
 “ and the Business that they were to follow, but with an equal “ Modesty and Gravity, she regulated their very Divertisements

(a) Plutarch, Compar. of Numa and Lycurg.
 Sermon of Education.

(b) Archbishop Tillotson's

“ and Recreations. Thus Cornelia, Aurelia, and Atica, Mothers to the Gracchi, Julius Cæsar, and Augustus, are reported to have undertaken the Office of Governesses, and to have employed themselves in the Education of Noblemens Children. The Strictness and Severity of such an Institution had this very good Design, That the Mind being thus preserved in its primitive Innocence and Integrity, and not debauched by ill Custom or ill Example, might apply itself with the greatest Willingness to liberal Arts, and embrace them with all its Powers and Faculties: That, whether it was particularly inclined either to the Profession of Arms, or to the Understanding of the Law, or to the Practice of Eloquence; it might make that its only Business, and greedily drink in the whole Knowledge of the favourite Study.

“ But now the young Infant is given in Charge to some poor Græcian Wench, and one or two of the Serving-men, perhaps, are joined in the Commission; generally the meanest and most ill-bred of the whole Pack, and such as are unfit for any serious Business. From the Stories and Tattle of such fine Companions, the soft and flexible Nature must take its first Impression and Bent. Over the whole Family there is not the least Care taken of what is said or done before the Child; while the very Parents, instead of inuring their dear little Ones to Virtue and Modesty, accustom them, on the quite Contrary, to Licentiousness and Wantonness, the natural Result of which is a settled Impudence, and a Contempt of those very Parents, and every body else.”

Thus although the Care and Instruction of Youth, among the old Romans, had been provided for by the Publick Laws, as in the Spartan State, yet the voluntary Diligence of Parents would have made all such Regulations superfluous.

Among the Domestic Cares, it will not be from the Purpose to take particular Notice of one, which required little Trouble or Difficulty, and yet proved as beneficial and serviceable as any other Institution: I mean the using Children to speak the Language purely at first, by letting them hear nothing but the truest and most proper Phrase. By this only Advantage several Persons arrived at the ordinary Repute in the Forum, who were so unhappy as to want many other Qualifications.

Tully says, that the Gracchi were educated, non tam in gremio quàm in sermone Matris: And he reports of C. Curio, who was reckoned the third Orator of his Time, that he understood no Poet, had read no Books of Eloquence, had made no Historical Collections, and had no Knowledge of the Publick or Private Part of the Law. The only Thing which gained him his Applause was a clean, shining Phrase, and a sudden Quickness and Fluency of Expression. This he got purely by the Benefit of his Private Education, being used to such a correct and polished Way of speaking in the House where he was brought up (a).

For Masters, in the first Place, they had the Literatores, or Γραμματισται, who taught the Children to read and write: To these they were committed about the Age of Six or Seven Years (b). Being come from under their Care, they were sent to the Grammar Schools, to learn the Art of speaking well, and the understanding of Authors: Or more frequently in the House of great Men some eminent Grammarian was entertained for that Employment.

It is pleasant to consider, what Prudence was used in these early Years to instil into the Children's Minds a Love and Inclination to the Forum, whence they were to expect the greatest Share of their Honours and Preferments. For Cicero tells Atticus, in his Second Book de Legibus, That, when they were Boys, they used to learn the famous Laws of the Twelve Tables by Heart, in the same Manner as they did an excellent Poem. And Plutarch relates in his Life of the younger Cato, That the very Children had a Play, in which they acted Pleadings of Causes before the Judges, accusing one another, and carrying the condemned Party to Prison.

The Masters already mentioned, together with the Instructors in the several Sorts of manly Exercises, for the improving of their natural Strength and Force, do not properly deserve that Name, if set in View with Rhetoricians and Philosophers; who, after that Reason had displayed her Faculties, and established her Command, were employed to cultivate and adorn the Advantages of Nature, and to give the last Hand toward the Forming of a Roman Citizen. Few Persons made any great Figure on the Scene of Action in their own Time, or in History afterwards, who, besides the constant frequenting of Publick Lectures, did not keep with them in the House some eminent Professor of Oratory or Wisdom.

I have often thought, That one main Reason of the prodigious Progress made by young Gentlemen, under these private Tutors, was the perfect Love and Endearment which we find to have been between Master and Scholar, by which Means Government and Instruction proceeded in the sweetest and easiest Way. All Persons in the happy Age of Rome had the same Honour and Respect for their Teachers, as Perfius had for his Master, Cornutus the Stoic, to whom addressing himself in his first Satyr, he thus admirably describes his own Love and Piety to his Governor, and the strict Friendship that was between them:

(a) Cic. in Brut.

(b) Dacier in Horat. Sat. 1. Lib. 1.

*Cumque iter ambiguum est, & vitæ nescius error
Diducit trepidas ramosa in compita mentes,
Me tibi supposui: teneros tu suspicis annos
Socratico, Cornute, sinu; tunc fallere solers
Apposita intortos extendit regula mores;
Et premitur ratione animus vincique laborat,
Artificemque tuo ducit sub pollice vultum,
Tecum etaniam longos memini consulere soles;
Et tecum primas epulis decerpere noctes.
Unum opus, & requiem pariter disponibus ambo,
Atque verecundâ laxamus seria mensâ,
Non equidem hoc dubites amborum fœdere certo
Consentire dies, & ab uno fidere luci.
Nostra vel aequali suspendit tempora libra
Parca tenax veri, seu nato fidelibus hora
Dividit in Geminos concordia fata duorum:
Saturnumque gravem nostro Jove fregimus una,
Nescio quod, certè est quod me tibi temperat astrum.*

Just at the Age when Manhood set me free,
I then depos'd myself, and left the Reins to thee:
On thy wife Bosom I repos'd my Head,
And by my better Socrates was bred.
Then thy straight Rule set Virtue in my Sight,
The crooked Line reforming by the Right.
My Reason took the Bent of thy Command;
Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful Hand.
Long Summer Days thy Precepts I rehearse,
And Winter Nights were short in our converse.
One was our Labour, one was our Repose;
One frugal Supper did our Studies close.
Sure on our Birth some friendly Planet shone,
And, as our Souls, our Horoscope was one;

Whether the mounting Twins did Heaven adorn,
Or with the rising Balance we were born.
Both have the same Impression from above,
And both have Saturn's Rage, repell'd by Jove,
What Star I know not, but some Star I find,
Has given thee an Ascendant o'er my Mind.
[Mr. Dryden.

Nor was the Reverence, paid by the Publick to the Informers of Youth, less remarkable than the Esteem and Duty of their Scholars. Which makes Juvenal break out into that elegant Rapture :

*Dii majorum umbris tenuem & sine pondere terram,
Spirantesque crocos, & in urnâ perpetuam ver,
Qui præceptorem sancti voluere parentis
Esse loco (a).*

In Peace, ye Shades of our great Grandfires, rest;
No heavy Earth your sacred Bones molest.
Eternal Springs and rising Flowers adorn
The Reliques of each venerable Urn:
Who pious Reverence to their Tutors paid,
As Parents honour'd, and as Gods obey'd.
[Mr. Charles Dryden.

At the Age of Seventeen Years, the young Gentlemen, when they put on the manly Gown, were brought in a solemn Manner to the Forum, and entered in the Study of Pleading; Not only if they designed to make this their chief Profession, but altho' their Inclinations lay rather to the Camp. For we scarce meet with any famous Captain who was not a good Speaker, or any eminent Orator, who had not served some Time in the Army. Thus it was requisite for all Persons, who had any Thoughts of rising in the World, to make a good Appearance, both at the Bar, and in the Field; because, if the Success of their Valour and Conduct should advance them to any considerable Post, it would have proved almost impossible, without the Advantage of Eloquence, to maintain their Authority with the Senate and People: Or, if the Force of their Oratory should in Time procure them the honourable Office of Prætor or Consul, they would not have been in a Capacity to undertake the Government of the Provinces (which fell to their Share at the Expiration of those Employments) without some Experience in Military Command.

Yet because the Profession of Arms was an Art which would easily give them an Opportunity of signaling themselves, and in which they would almost naturally excel, as Occasion should be afterwards offered for their Service; their whole Application and Endeavours were directed at present to the Study of Law and Rhetorick, as the Foundations of their future Grandeur: Or, perhaps, they now and then made a Campaign, as well for a Diversion from several Labours, as for their Improvement in martial Discipline.

In the Dialogue de Oratoribus we have a very good Account of this Admission of young Gentlemen into the Forum, and of the Necessity of such a Course in the Commonwealth; which, coming from so great a Master, cannot fail to be very pertinent and instructive.

“ Among our Ancestors, says the Author, the Youth who “ was designed for the Forum, and the Practice of Eloquence,
 “ being now furnished with the liberal Arts, and the Advantage of a Domestick Institution, was brought by his Father,
 “ or near Relations, to the most celebrated Orator in the City.
 “ Him he constantly used to attend, and to be always present
 “ at his Performance of any Kind, either in judicial Matters, or “ in the ordinary Assemblies of the People: So that by this “ Means he learned to engage in the Laurels and Contentions “ of the Bar, and to approve himself a Man at Arms in the “ Wars of the Pleaders.

“ For in that ancient Constitution of a mixed State, when the “ Differences were never referred to one supreme Person, the “ Orators determined Matters as they pleased, by prevailing on “ the Minds of the ignorant Multitude. Hence came the Ambition of popular Applause: Hence the great Variety of Laws “ and Decrees: Hence the tedious Speeches and Harangues of “ the Magistrates, sometimes carried on whole Nights in the “ Rostra: Hence the frequent Indictment and Impleading of the “ powerful Criminals, and the Exposing of Houses to the Violence and Fury of the Rabble: Hence the Factions of the “ Nobility, and the constant Heats and Bickerings between the “ Senate and People. All which, though in great Measure they “ distracted the Commonwealth, yet had this good Effect, that “ they exercised and improved the Eloquence of those Times,

“ by proposing the highest Rewards of that Study. Because,
 “ the more excellent any Person appeared in the Art of Speak“ ing, the more easily he arrived at Honours and Employments;
 “ the more he surpassed his Colleague in the same Office, the “ greater was his Favour with the leading Men of the City, his “ Authority with the Senate, and his Renown and Esteem
 “ among the Commons. These Men were courted and waited “ on by Clients even of Foreign Nations: These, when they “ undertook the Command of Provinces, the very Magistrates “ revered at their Departure, and adored at their Return:
 “ These the highest Offices of Prætor or Consul seemed to require
 “ and call for, and court their Acceptance: These, when in a “ private Station, abated very little of their Authority, while “ they guided both the Senate and the People by their Counsel.
 “ For they took this for an infallible Maxim, That without “ Eloquence it was impossible either to attain or defend a con“ siderable Trust in the Commonwealth: And no Wonder,
 “ when they were drawn to Business even against their Will,
 “ and compelled to shew their Parts in Publick. When it was “ reckoned but an ordinary Matter to deliver one's Opinion in “ short before the Senate, unless a Man could maintain and “ improve it with the engaging Ornaments of Wit and Elo“ quence. When, if they had contracted any Envy or Suspi“ cion, they were to answer the Accuser's Charge in Person.
 “ When they could not so much as give their Evidence, as to “ publick Matters, in Writing; but were obliged to appear in “ Court, and deliver it with their own Mouth. So that there “ was not only a vast Encouragement, but even a Necessity of “ Eloquence: To be a fine Speaker was counted Brave and “ Glorious; on the other Hand, to act only a mute Person, on “ the Publick Stage, was Scandalous and Reproachful. And “ thus a Sense of Honour, and Desire of avoiding Infamy, was “ a main Incitement to their Endeavours to these Studies; lest “ they should be reckoned among the Clients rather than among “ the Patrons; lest the numerous Dependances transmitted to “ them from their Ancestors should now at last pass into other “ Families, for Want of an able Supporter; lest, like a Sort of “ useless and unprofitable Creatures, they should either be “ frustrated in their Pretensions to Honour and Preferments,
 “ or else disgrace themselves and their Office by the Miscar-
 “ riages of their Administration.”

Cicero and Antonius, the two chief Managers of the Discourse in Tully's first Book de Oratore, are represented as very opposite

opposite in their Judgments, concerning the necessary Improvements of an accomplished Orator. The former denies any Person the Honour of his Name, who does not possess, in some Degree, all the Qualities, both native and acquired, that enter into the Composition of a general Scholar. The Force of his Argument lies in this, That an Orator ought to be able to deliver himself copiously on all Manner of Subjects; and he does not see how any one can answer this Character, without some Excellency in all the Mysteries of Arts and Learning, as well as in the happy Endowments of Nature. Yet he would not have these Acquisitions sit so loose about him, as to be laid open to the Bottom on every Occasion; but that (as a great Man expresseth it) they should rather be enamelled in his Mind, than embossed upon it. That, as the Critics in Gait and Gestures will easily discover, by the Comportment of a Man's Body, whether he has learned to dance, though he does not practise his Art in his ordinary Motion: So an Orator, when he delivers himself on any Subject, will easily make it appear whether he has a full Understanding of the particular Art or Faculty on which the Cause depends, though he does not discourse of it in the Manner of a Philosopher or a Mechanic. Antonius, on the other Hand, reflecting on the Shortness of human Life, and how great a Part of it is commonly taken up in the Attainment of but a few Parts of Knowledge, is inclined to believe, that Oratory does not require the necessary Attendance of its Sister Arts; but that a Man may be able to prosecute a Theme of any Kind, without a Train of Sciences, and the Advantages of a learned Institution. That as few Persons are to seek in the Cultivating of their Land, or the Contrivance and Elegance of their Gardens, though they never read Cato de Re Rustica, or Mago the Carthaginian: So an Orator may harangue, with a great deal of Reason and Truth, on a Subject taken from any Part of Knowledge, without any farther Acquaintance with the nicer Speculations, than his common Sense and Understanding, Improved by Experience and Conversation, shall lead him to: "For who ever (says he) when he comes to move the Affections of the Judges or People, stops at this, that he hath not Philosophy enough to dive into the first Springs of the Passions, and to discover their various Natures and Operations? Besides, at this Rate, we must quite lay aside the Way of raising Pity in the Audience, by representing the Misery of a distressed Party, or describing (perhaps) the Slavery which he endures: When Philosophy tells us,

" That

"That a good Man can never be miserable, and, that Virtue
" is always absolutely free."

Now as Cicero, without Doubt, set himself for the Picture which, in Crassus's Name, he there draws of an Orator, and therefore strengthens his Arguments by his own Example as well as his Judgment; so Antonius, in the next Dialogue, does not stick to own, that his former Assertion was rather taken up for the Sake of Disputing and Encountering his Rival, than to deliver the just Sentiments of his Mind. And therefore, the genteel Education, in the politer Ages of Rome, being wholly directed to the Bar, it seems probable, that no Part of useful Knowledge was omitted, for the Improving and Adorning of the main Study; and that all other Arts were courted, though not with an equal Passion. And upon the Whole it appears, that a strange Assiduity, and unwearied Application, were the very Life and Soul of their Designs. When their Historians describe an extraordinary Man, this always enters into his Character as an essential Part of it, that he was incredibili industria, diligentia singulari; of incredible Industry, of singular Diligence (a). And Cato in Sallust tells the Senate; That it was not the Arms so much as the Industry of their Ancestors, which advanced the Grandeur of Rome: So that the Founders and Regulators of this State, in making Diligence and Labour necessary Qualifications of a Citizen, took the same Course as the Poets will have Jupiter to have thought on, when he succeeded to the Government over the primitive Mortals:

Pater ipse colendi
Haud facilem esse viam voluit; primusque per artem
Movit agros, curvis acuens mortalia corda,
Nec torpere gravi passus sua regna veterno (b).

To confirm the Opinion of their extreme Industry and perpetual Study and Labour, it may not seem impertinent to instance in the three common Exercises of Translating, Declaiming, and Reciting.

Translation the ancient Orators of Rome looked on as a most useful, though a most laborious Employment. All Persons that

applied

applied themselves to the Bar, commonly proposed some one Orator of Greece for their constant Pattern; either Lyfius, Hypérides, Demosthenes, or Æschines, as their Genius was inclined. Him they continually studied, and, to render themselves absolutely Masters of his Excellencies, were always making him speak their own Tongue. This Cicero, Quintilian, and Pliny Junior, injoin as an indispensable Duty, in order to the acquiring any Talent in Eloquence. And the first of these great Men, besides his many Versions of the Orators for his private Use, obliged the Public with the Translation of several Parts of Plato and Xenophon in Prose, and of Homer and Aratus in Verse.

As to Declaiming, this was not the only main Thing at which they laboured under the Masters of Rhetoric, but what they practised long after they undertook real Causes, and had gained a considerable Name in the Forum. Suetonius, in his Book of Famous Rhetoricians, tells us, that Cicero declaimed in Greek till he was elected Prætor, and in Latin till near his Death. That Pompey the Great, just at the Breaking out of the Civil War, resumed his old Exercise of Declaiming, that he might the more easily be able to deal with Curio, who undertook the Defence of Cæsar's Cause, in his public Harangues. That Mark Antony and Augustus did not lay aside this Custom, even when they were engaged in the Siege of Mutina: And, That Nero was not only constant at his Declamations, while in a private Station, but for the first Year after his Advancement to the Empire.

It was worth remarking, that the Subject of these old Declamations was not a mere fanciful Thesis, but a Case which might probably be brought into the Courts of Judicature. The contrary Practice, which crept into some Schools after the Augustan Age, to the great Debasing of Eloquence, is what Petronius inveighs so severely against, in the Beginning of his Satyricon, in a Strain so elegant, that it would lose a great Part of the Grace and Spirit in any Translation.

When I speak of Recitation, I intend not to insist on the public Performances of the Poets in that Kind, for which Purpose they commonly borrowed the House of some of their noblest Patrons, and carried on the whole Matter before a vast Concourse of People, and with Abundance of Ceremony. For, considering the ordinary Circumstances of Men of that Profession, this may be thought not so much the Effect of an industrious industrious Temper, as the necessary Way of raising a Name among the Wits, and getting a tolerable Livelihood. And it is evident, that, under some Princes, the most celebrated of this Tribe, for all their Trouble and Pains in proclaiming their Parts to the Multitude, could hardly keep themselves from starving, as Juvenal observes of Statius:

——— *Sed cum fregit subsellia versu,
Esurit, intactam Paridi nisi vendit Agaven.*

I would mean, therefore, the Rehearsal of all Manner of Compositions in Prose or Verse, performed by Men of some Rank and Quality, before they obliged the World with their Publication. This was ordinarily done in a Meeting of Friends and Acquaintance, and now and then with the Admission of a more numerous Audience. The Design they chiefly aimed at was the Correction and Improvement of the Piece. For the Author, having a greater Awe and Concern upon him on these Occasions than at other Times, must needs take more Notice of every Word and Sentence, while he spoke them before the Company, than he did in the Composure, or in the common Supervisal. Besides, he had the Advantage of all his Friends Judgments, whether intimated to him afterwards in private Conference, or tacitly declared at the Recital by their Looks and Nods, with many other Tokens of Dislike and Approbation. In the fuller Auditories he had the Benefit of seeing what took or what did not take with the People; whose common Suffrage was of so great Authority in this Case, that Pomponius Secundus, a celebrated Author of Tragedies, when he consulted with his Friends about the Polishing any of his Writings, if they happened to differ in their Opinion about the Elegance, Justness, and Propriety of any Thought or Expression, used always to say, AD POPULUM PROVOCO, I APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE, as the best Deciders of the Controversy (a).

The Example of the younger Pliny, in this Practice, is very observable, and the Account which we have of it is given us by himself. I omit (says he) no Way or Method that may seem proper for Correction: And first I take a strict View of what I have written, and consider thoroughly of the whole Piece. In the next Place, I read it over to two or three Friends: And soon after send it to others for the Benefit of their Observations. If I am in any Doubt concerning their Criticisms, I take in the Assistance of one or two besides myself, to judge and debate the Matter. Last of all, I recite before a greater Number: And this is the Time that I furnish myself with the severest Emendations (a).

It might be a farther Pleasure on this Subject to describe the whole Institution and Course of Study of the most famous Romans, with their gradual Advances to those Virtues and Attainments, which we still admire in their Story. But the Account, which Cicero gives of himself in his Brutus, and some Hints from other Parts of his Works, will excuse, if not command, the Omission of all the rest. And it is no ordinary Happiness, that we are obliged with the History of that excellent Person from his own Hand, whom we must certainly pitch upon for the first and greatest Example, if we were beholden only to the Relations of other Men.

For some Time after his Admission to the Forum, he was a constant Auditor of the best Pleaders, whenever they spoke in Publick. Every Day he spent several Hours in Writing, Reading, and Improving his Invention; besides the Exercises he performed in the Art of Oratory. For the Knowledge of the Civil Law, he applied himself with all imaginable Diligence to Q. Scævola, the most celebrated Professor of that Science, who, though he did not make it his Business to procure Scholars, yet he was very ready and willing to assist such Persons in this Study as desired his Advice and Directions. It was to this Scævola that Cicero's Father, when he put him on his Manly Gown, committed his Son, with a strict Charge never to stir from him, but on extraordinary Accounts.

About the 19th Year of his Age, in the Heat of the Contention between Marius and Sylla, when the Courts of Judicature were shut up, and all Things in Confusion, Philo the Prince of the Academy leaving Athens, on Occasion of the Mithridatick War, took up his Residence in Rome. Cicero wholly resigned himself to his Institution, having now fixed the Bent of his Thoughts and Inclinations to Philosophy, to which he gave the more diligent Attendance, because the Distractions of the Time gave him little Reason to hope, that the judicial Process, and the regular Course of the Laws, would ever be restored to their former Vigour. Yet, not entirely to forsake his Oratory, at the same Time he made his Applications to Molo the Rhodian, a famous Pleader and Master of Rhetorick.

Sylla being now the second Time advanced against Mithridates, the City was not much disturbed with Arms for three Years together. During this Interval Cicero, with unwearied Diligence, made his Advances Day and Night in all Manner of Learning, having now the Benefit of a new Instructor, Diadotus the Stoic, who lived and died in his House. To this Master, besides his Improvement in other useful Parts of Knowledge, he was particularly obliged for keeping him continually exercised in Logick, which he calls a concise and compact Kind of Eloquence.

But, though engaged at the same Time in so many and such different Faculties, he let no Day slip without some Performance in Oratory: Declaiming constantly with the best Antagonists he could light on among his Students. In this Exercise he did not stick to any one Language, but sometimes made Use of Latin, sometimes of Greek; and indeed more frequently of the latter; either because the Beauties and Ornaments of the Greek Style would by this Means grow so natural, as easily to be imitated in his own Tongue: Or because his Græcian Masters would not be such proper Judges of his Style and Method, nor so well able to correct his Failures, if he delivered himself in any other than their native Language.

Upon Sylla's victorious Return, and his Settlement of the Commonwealth, the Lawyers recovered their Practice, and the ordinary Course of judicial Matters was revived: And then it was that Cicero came to the Bar, and undertook the Patronage of publick and private Causes. His first Oration, in a publick Judgment, was the Defence of Sextus Roscius, prosecuted by no less a Man than the Dictator himself, which was the Reason that none of the old staunch Advocates dared appear in his Behalf. Cicero carried the Cause, to his great Honour, being now about six or seven and twenty: And, having behaved himself so remarkably well in his first Enterprize, there was no Business thought too weighty or difficult for his Management.

He found himself at this Time to labour under a very weak Constitution, to which was added the natural Defect in his Make Make of a long and thin Neck : So that in Probability the Labour and Straining of the Body, required in an Orator, could not consist but with manifest Danger of his Life. This was especially to be feared in him, because he was observed in his Pleadings to keep his Voice always at the highest Pitch in a most vehement and impetuous Tone, and at the same Time to use a proportionable Violence in his Gesture and Action. Upon this Consideration the Physicians, and his nearest Friends, were continually urging him to lay aside all Thoughts of a Profession which appeared to extremely prejudicial to his Health. But Cicero shewed himself equally inflexible to the Advice of the one, and the Intreaties of the other; and declared his Resolution rather to run the Risque of any Danger that might happen, than deprive himself of the Glory which he might justly challenge from the Bar.

Confirming himself in this Determination, he began to think, that upon altering his Mode of speaking, and bringing his Voice down to a lower and more moderate Key, he might abate considerably of the Heat and Fury which now transported him, and by that Means avoid the Damage which seemed now to threaten his Design.

For the Effecting of the Cure, he concluded on a Journey into Greece : And so, after he had made his Name very considerable in the Forum, by two Years Pleading, he left the City. Being arrived at Athens, he took up his Residence for six Months with the Philosopher Atticus, the wisest and most noble Assessor of the old Academy : And here, under the Direction of the greatest Master, he renewed his Acquaintance with that Part of Learning which had been the constant Entertainment of his Youth, at the same Time performing his Exercises in Oratory under the Care of Demetrius the Syrian, an eminent Professor of the Art of Speaking. After this he made a Circuit round all Asia, with several of the most celebrated Orators and Rhetoricians, who voluntarily offered him their Company.

But, not satisfied with all these Advantages, he sailed to Rhodes, and there entered himself once more among the Scholars of the famous Melo, whom he had formerly heard at Rome : One that, besides his admirable Talent at Pleading and Penning, had a peculiar Happiness in marking and correcting the Defaults in any Performance. It was to his Institution that Cicero gratefully acknowledges he owed the Retrenching of his juvenile Heat and unbounded Freedom of Thought, which did not consist with the just Rules of an exact and severe Method.

Returning

Returning to Rome, after two Years Absence, he appeared quite another Man: For his Body, strengthened by Exercise, was come to a tolerable Habit: His Way of speaking seemed to have grown cool; and his Voice was rendered much easier to himself, and much sweeter to the Audience. Thus, about the one and thirtieth Year of his Age, he arrived at that full Perfection, which had so long taken up his whole Wishes and Endeavours, and which hath been, ever since, the Admiration or Envy of the World.

PART I. BOOK I.

The Original, Growth, and Decay of the ROMAN Commonwealth.

CHAP. I.

Of the BUILDING of the CITY.

WHILE we view the Original of States and Kingdoms (the most delightful and surprising Part of History) we easily discern, as the first and fairest Prospect, the Rise of the Jewish and Roman Commonwealths : Of which, as the former had the Honour always to be esteemed the Favourite of Heaven, and the peculiar Care of Divine Providence ; so the other had very good Pretensions to stile herself the Darling of Fortune ; who seemed to express a more than ordinary Fondness for this her youngest Daughter, as if she had designed the three former Monarchies purely for a Foil to set off this latter. Their own Historians rarely begin without a Fit of Wonder ; and, before they proceed to delineate the glorious Scene, give themselves the Liberty of standing still some Time, to admire at a Distance.

For the Founder of the City and Republick, Authors have long since agreed on Romulus, Son of Rhea Sylvia, and Descendant of Aneas, from whom his Pedigree may be thus in short derived :

Upon

Upon the final Ruin and Destruction of Troy by the Grecians, Aeneas, with a small Number of Followers, had the good Fortune to secure himself by Flight. His Escape was very much countenanced by the Enemy, inasmuch as upon all Occasions he had expressed his Inclinations to a Peace, and to the Restoring of Helen, the unhappy Cause of the Mischief. Sailing thus from Troy, after a tedious Voyage, and great Variety of Adventures, he arrived at last at Latium, a Part of Italy so called, à latendo, or from lying hid; being the Place that Saturn had chose for his Retirement, when expelled the Kingdom of Greta by his rebellious Son Jupiter. Here applying himself to the King of the Country, at that Time Latinus, he obtained his only Daughter, Lavinia, in Marriage; and, upon the Death of his Father-in-law, was left in Possession of the Crown. He removed the Imperial Seat from Laurentum to Lavinium, a City which he had built himself in Honour of his Wife; and upon his Decease soon after, the Right of Succession rested in Ascanius, whether his Son by a former Wife, and the same he brought with him from Troy, or another of that Name, which he had by Lavinia, Livy leaves undetermined. Ascanius being under Age, the Government was entrusted in the Hands of Lavinia: But, as soon as he was grown up, he left his Mother in Possession of Lavinium; and removing with Part of the Men, laid the Foundation of a new City, along the Side of the Mountain Albanus, called from thence Longa Alba. After him, by a Succession of Eleven Princes, the Kingdom devolved at last to Procas. Procas at his Death left two Sons, Numitor and Amulius; of whom Amulius overreaching his elder Brother, obliged him to quit his Claim to the Crown, which he thereupon secured to himself; and to prevent all Disturbance that might probably arise to him or his Posterity, from the elder Family, making away with all the Males, he constrained Numitor's only Daughter, Rhea Sylvia, to take on her the Habit of a Vestal, and consequently a Vow of perpetual Virginity. However, the Princess was soon after found with Child; and delivered of two Boys, Romulus and Remus. The Tyrant being acquainted with the Truth, immediately condemned his Niece to strait Imprisonment, and the Infants to be exposed, or carried and left in a strange Place, where it was very improbable they should meet with any Relief. The Servant, who had the Care of this inhuman Office, left the Children at the Bottom of a Tree, by the Bank of the River Tyber. In this sad Condition, they were casually discovered by Faustulus, the King's Shepherd; who being wholly ignorant of the Plot, took the Infants up, and carried them home to his Wife Laurentia, to be nursed with his own Children (a). This Wife of his had formerly been a common Prostitute, called in Latin Lupa; which Word likewise signifying a She-Wolf, gave Occasion to the Story of their being nursed by such a Beast; though some take the Word always in a literal Sense, and maintain that they really subsisted some Time by sucking this Creature, before they had the good Fortune to be relieved by Faustulus (b). The Boys, as they grew up, discovering the natural Greediness of their Minds and Thoughts, addicted themselves to the generous Exercises of Hunting, Racing, taking of Robbers, and such like; and always expressed a great Desire of engaging in any Enterprize that appeared hazardous and noble (c). Now there happening a Quarrel between the Herdsmen of Numitor and Amulius, the former lighting casually on Remus, brought him before their Master to be examined. Numitor, learning from his own Mouth the strange Circumstance of his Education and Fortune, easily guessed him to be one of his Grandsons, who had been exposed. He was soon confirmed in this Conjecture, upon the Arrival of Faustulus and Romulus; when the whole Business was laid open, upon Consultation had, gaining over to their Party a sufficient Number of the disaffected Citizens, they contrived to surprise Amulius and re-establish Numitor. This Design was soon after very happily put in Execution, the Tyrant slain, and the old King restored to a full Enjoyment of the Crown (d). The young Princes had no sooner resealed their Grandfather in his Throne, but they began to think of procuring one for themselves. They had higher Thoughts than to take up with the Reversion of a Kingdom; and were unwilling to live in Alba, because they could not govern there: So taking with them their Foster-Father, and what others they could get together, they began the Foundation of a new City, in the same Place where in their Infancy they had been brought up (e). The first Walls were scarce finished; when upon a slight Quarrel, the Occasion of which is variously reported by Historians, the younger Brother had the Misfortune to be slain. Thus the whole Power came into Romulus's Hands; who carrying on the Remainder of the Work, gave the City a Name in Allusion to his own, and hath been ever accounted the Founder and Patron of the Roman Commonwealth.
the

C H A P. II.

Of the ROMAN Affairs under the Kings.

THE witty Historian (a) had very good Reason to entitle the Reign of the Kings the Infancy of Rome; for it is certain that under them she was hardly able to find her own Legs, and at the best had but a very feeble Motion. The greatest Part of Romulus's Time was taken up in making Laws and Regulations for the Commonwealth: Three of his State Designs, I mean the Apylum, the Rape of the Sabine Virgins, and his Way of treating those few whom he conquered, as they far exceeded the Politicks of those Times, so they contributed, in an extraordinary Degree, to the Advancement of the new Empire. But then Numa's long Reign served only for the Establishment of Priests and Religious Orders; and in those three and forty Years (b) Rome gained not so much as one Foot of Ground. Tullius Hostilius was wholly employed in converting his Subjects from the pleasing Amusements of Superstition to the rougher Institution of martial Discipline: Yet we find nothing memorable related of his Conquests; only that, after a long and dubious War, the Romans entirely ruined their old Mother Alba (c). After him Ancus Martius, laying aside all Thoughts of extending the Bounds of the Empire, applied himself wholly to strengthen and beautify the City (d); and esteemed the Commodiousness and Magnificence of that the noblest Design he could possibly be engaged in. Tarquinius Priscus, though not altogether so quiet as his Predecessor, yet consulted very little else besides the Dignity of the Senate, and the Majesty of the Government; for the Increase of which he appointed the Ornaments and Badges of the several Officers to distinguish them from the common People (e). A more peaceful Temper appeared in Servius Tullius, whose principal Study was to have an exact Account of the States of the Romans; and, according to those, to divide them into Tribes (f), that so they might contribute with Justice and Proportion to the public Expences of the State. Tarquin the Proud, though perhaps more engaged in Wars than any of his Predecessors (a), yet had in his Nature such a strange Composition of the most extravagant Vices, as must necessarily have proved fatal to the growing Tyranny; and had not the Death of the unfortunate Lucretia administered to the People an Opportunity of Liberty, yet a far slighter Matter would have served them for a specious Reason to endeavour the Assertion of their Rights. However, on this Accident, all were suddenly transported with such a Mixture of Fury and Compassion, that under the Conduct of Brutus and Collatinus, to whom the dying Lady had recommended the Revenge of her injured Honour, (b) rushing immediately upon the Tyrant, they expelled him and his whole Family. A new Form of Government was now resolved on; and, because to live under a divided Power carried something of Complacency in the Prospect (c), they unanimously conferred the supreme Command on the two generous Assertors of their Liberties (d). Thus ended the Royal Administration, after it had continued about two hundred and fifty Years.

Florus, in his Reflections on this first Age of Rome, cannot forbear applauding the happy Fate of his Country, that it should be blessed in that weak Age, with a Succession of Princes so fortunately different in their Aims and Designs, as if Heaven had purposely adapted them to the several Exigencies of the State (e). And the famous Machiavel is of the same Opinion (f). But a judicious Author (g) hath lately observed, that this Difference of Genius in the Kings, was so far from procuring any Advantage to the Roman People, that their small Increase, under that Government, is referable to no other Cause. However, thus far we are assured, that those seven Princes left behind them a Dominion of no larger Extent than that of Parma or Mantua at present,

C H A P. III.

Of the ROMAN Affairs, from the Beginning of the Consular Government, to the first Punick War.

THE Tyrant was no sooner expelled, but, as it usually happens, there was great Plotting and Designing for his Restoration. Among several other young Noblemen, Brutus's two Sons had engaged themselves in the Association: But the Conspiracy being happily discovered, and the Traitors brought before the Consuls, in order to their Punishment, Brutus only addressing himself to his Sons, and demanding whether they had any Defence to make against the Indictment, upon their Silence, ordered them immediately to be beheaded; and staying himself to see the Execution, committed the Rest to the Judgment of his Colleague (a). No Action among the old Romans has made a greater Noise than this. It would be exceeding difficult to determine, whether it proceeded from a Motion of heroick Virtue, or the Hardness of a cruel or unnatural Humour; or whether Ambition had not as great a Share in it as either. But though the Flame was so happily stifled within the City, it soon broke out with greater Fury abroad: For Tarquin was not only received with all imaginable Kindness and Respect by the neighbouring States, but supplied too with all Necessaries, in order to the Recovery of his Dominions. The most powerful Prince in Italy was at that Time Perseus, King of Etruria or Tuscany; who, not content to furnish him with the same Supplies as the rest, approached with a numerous Army in his Behalf, to the very Walls of Rome (b). The City was in great Hazard of being taken, when an Admiration of the Virtue and gallant Disposition of the Romans induced the Besieger to a Peace (c). The most remarkable Instances of this extraordinary Courage were Cocles, Mutius, and Claelia. Cocles, when the Romans were driven back in an unfortunate Sally, and the Enemy made good their Pursuit to the very Bridge, only with the Assistance of two Persons, defended it against their whole Power, till his own Party broke it down behind; and then cast himself in his Armour into the River, and swam over to the other Side (a). Mutius having failed in an Attempt upon Por-senna's Person, and being brought before the King to be examined, thrust his Right-hand, which had committed the Mistake, into a Pan of Coals that stood ready for the Sacrifice. Upon which generous Action he was dismissed without farther Injury. As for Glaucia, she, with other noble Virgins, had been delivered to the Enemy for Hostages, on Account of a Truce; when obtaining Liberty to bathe themselves in the Tiber, she, getting on Horseback before the rest, encouraged them to follow her through the Water to the Romans; though the Consul generously sent them back to the Enemy's Camp. Por-senna had no sooner drawn off his Army, but the Sabines and Latins joined in a Confederacy against Rome; and though they were extremely weakened by the Desertion of Appius Claudius, who went over with five thousand Families to the Romans; yet they could not be entirely subdued, till they received a total Overthrow from Valerius Poplicola, (b). But the Æqui and the Volscei, the most obstinate of the Latins, and the continual Enemies of Rome, carried on the Remainder of the War for several Years, till it was happily concluded by Lucius Quintius, the famous Dictator taken from the Plough, in less than fifteen Days Time: Upon which Florus has this Remark, That he made more than ordinary Hastle to his unfinished Work (c). But they, that made the greatest Opposition, were the Inhabitants of Veii, the Head of Tuscany, a City not inferior to Rome either in Store of Arms, or Multitude of Soldiers. They had contended with the Romans, in a long Series of Battles, for Glory and Empire; but having been weakened and brought down in several Encounters, they were obliged to secure themselves within their Walls: And, after a Ten Years Siege, the Town was forced and sacked by Camillus (d). In this Manner were the Romans extending their Conquests, when the Irruption of the Gauls made a strange Alteration in the Affairs of Italy. They were at this Time besieging Clusium, a Tuscan City. The Clusians sent to the Romans, desiring them to interpose by Ambassadors on their Behalf. Their Request was easily granted; and three of the Fabii, Persons of the highest Rank in the City, dispatched for this Purpose to the Gallick Camp. The Gauls, in Respect to the Name of Rome, received them with all imaginable Civility; but could by no Means be prevailed on to quit the Siege. Whereupon the Ambassadors going into the Town, and encouraging the Clusians to a Sally, one of them was seen personally engaging in the Action. This being contrary to the received Law of Nations, was resented in so high a Manner by the Enemy, that, breaking up from before Clusium, the whole Army marched directly toward Rome. About eleven Miles from the City, they met with the Roman Army commanded by the Military Tribunes, who, engaging without any Order or Discipline, received an entire Defeat. Upon the Arrival of this ill News, the greatest Part of the Inhabitants immediately fled: Those that resolved to stay fortified themselves in the Capitol. The Gauls soon appeared at the City-Gates; and destroying all with Fire and Sword, carried on the Siege of the Capitol with all imaginable Fury. At last, resolving on a general Assault, they were discovered by the Cackling of Geese that were kept for that Purpose; and as many as had climbed the Rampart were driven down by the valiant Manlius; when Camillus, setting upon them in the Rear with twenty thousand Men he got together about the Country, gave them a total Overthrow. The greatest Part of those that escaped out of the Field were cut off in straggling Parties, by the Inhabitants of the neighbouring Towns and Villages. The City had been so entirely demolished, that, upon the Return of the People, they thought of removing to Veii, a City ready built, and excellently provided of all Things: But being diverted from this Design, by an Omen (as they thought) they set to the Work with such extraordinary Diligence and Application, that within the Compass of a Year the whole City was rebuilt. They had scarce gained a Breathing-time after their Troubles, when the united Powers of the Æqui, Volsci, and other Inhabitants of Latium, at once invaded their Territories. But they were soon overreached by a Stratagem of Camillus, and totally routed (a).

Nor had the Samnites any better Fate, tho' a People very numerous, and of great Experience in War. The Contention with them lasted no less than fifty Years (b), when they were finally subdued by Papirius Cursor (c). The Tarentine War that followed, put an End to the entire Conquest of Italy. Tarentum, a City of great Strength and Beauty, seated on the Adriatick Sea, was especially remarkable for the Commerce it maintained with most of the neighbouring Countries, as Epirus, Illyricum, Sicily, &c. (d). Among other Ornaments of their City they had a spacious Theatre for public Sports, built hard by the Sea-shore. They happened to be engaged in the Celebration of some such Solemnity, when, upon Sight of the Roman Fleet that casually sailed by their Coasts, imagining them to be Enemies, they immediately set upon them, and, killing the Commander, rifled the greatest Part of the Vessels. Ambassadors were soon dispatched from Rome to demand Satisfaction; But they met with as ill a Reception as the Fleet, being disgracefully sent away without so much as a Hearing. Upon this, a War was soon commenced between the States. The Tarentines were increased by an incredible Number of Allies from all Parts: But he that made the greatest Appearance in their Behalf, was Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, the most experienced General of his Time. Besides the choicest of his Troops that accompanied him in the Expedition, he brought into the Field a considerable Number of Elephants, a Sort of Beast scarce heard of 'till that Time in Italy. In the first Engagement, the Romans were in fair Hopes of a Victory, when the Fortune of the Day was entirely changed upon the Coming up of the Elephants; who made such a prodigious Destruction in the Roman Cavalry, that the whole Army was obliged to retire. But the politick General, having experienced so well the Roman Courage, immediately after the Victory, sent to offer Conditions for a Peace; but was absolutely refused. In the next Battle, the Advantage was on the Roman Side, who had not now such dismal Apprehensions of the Elephants, as before. However, the Business came to another Engagement, when the Elephants, over-running whole Ranks of their own Men, enraged by the Cry of a young one that had been wounded, gave the Romans an absolute Victory (a). Twenty-three Thousand of the Enemy were killed (b), and Pyrrhus finally expelled Italy. In this War the Romans had a fair Opportunity to subdue the other Parts that remained unconquered, under the Pretext of Allies to the Tarentines. So that at this Time, about the 477th Year of the Building of the City (c), they had made themselves the entire Masters of Italy.

C H A P. IV.

Of the ROMAN Affairs from the Beginning of the first Punick War, to the first Triumvirate.

BUT the Command of the Continent could not satisfy the Roman Courage; especially while they saw so delicious an Isle as Sicily almost within their Reach: They only waited an Occasion to pass the Sea, when Fortune presented as fair an one as they could wish. The Inhabitants of Messina, a Sicilian City, made grievous Complaints to the Senate, of the daily Encroachments of the Carthaginians, a People of vast Wealth and Power, and that had the same Design on Sicily as the Romans (a). A Fleet was soon manned out for their Assistance; and, in two Years Time, no less than fifty Cities were brought over (b). The entire Conquest of the Island quickly followed; and Sardinia and Corfica were taken in and about the same Time by a separate Squadron. And now, under the Command of Regulus and Manlius, the Consuls, the War was translated into Africa. Three hundred Forts and Castles were destroyed in their March, and the victorious Legions encamped under the very Walls of Carthage. The Enemy, reduced to such Straits, were obliged to apply themselves to Xantippus, King of the Lacedæmonians, the greatest Captain of the Age; who immediately marched to their Assistance with a numerous and well-disciplined Army. In the very first Engagement with the Romans, he entirely defeated their whole Power: Thirty thousand were killed on the Spot, and fifteen thousand, with their Consul Regulus, taken Prisoners. But as good Success always encouraged the Romans to greater Designs, so a contrary Event did but exasperate them the more. The new Consuls were immediately dispatched with a powerful Navy, and a sufficient Number of Land Forces. Several Campaigns were now wasted without any considerable Advantage on either Side: Or if the Romans gained any Thing by their Victories, they generally lost as much by Shipwrecks; when at last, the whole Power of both States being drawn together on the Sea, the Carthaginians were finally defeated, with the Loss of 125

(a) Florus, lib. 2. cap. 2.(b) Entrop. lib. 2.

Ships sunk in the Engagement; 73 taken; 32,000 Men killed, and 13,000 Prisoners. Upon this they were compelled to sue for a Peace; which, after much Entreaty, and upon very hard Conditions, was at last obtained (a).

But the Carthaginians had too great Spirits to submit to such unreasonable Terms any longer than their Necessities obliged them. In four Years Time (b) they had got together an Army of 80,000 Foot, and 20,000 Horse (c), under the Command of the famous Hannibal; who forcing a Way through the Pyrenean Mountains and the Alps, reputed till that Time impassable, descended with his vast Army into Italy. In four successive Battles he defeated the Roman Forces; in the last of which, at Cannæ, 40,000 of the latter were killed (d); and had he not been merely cast away by the Envy and Ill-will of his own Countrymen, it is more than possible that he must have entirely ruined the Roman State (e): But Supplies of Men and Money being sometimes absolutely denied him, and never coming but very slowly, the Romans had such Opportunities to recruit, as they little expected from so experienced an Adversary. The wise Management of Fabius Maximus was the first Revival of the Roman Cause. He knew very well the Strength of the Enemy; and therefore marched against him without intending to hazard a Battle; but to wait constantly upon him, to straiten his Quarters, intercept his Provisions, and so make the victorious Army pine away with Penury and Want. With this Design he always encamped upon the high Hills, where the Horse could have no Access to him: When they marched, he did the same; but at such a Distance, as not to be compelled to an Engagement. By this Policy he so broke Hannibal's Army, as to make him absolutely despair of getting any Thing in Italy (f). But the Conclusion of the War was owing to the Conduct of Scipio: He had before reduced all Spain into Subjection; and, now taking the same Course as Hannibal at first had done, he marched with the greatest Part of the Roman Forces into Africa; and, carrying all before him to the very Walls of Carthage, obliged the Enemy to call Home their General out of Italy, for the Defence of the City. Hannibal obeyed; and both Armies coming to an Engagement, after a long Dispute, wherein the Commanders and Soldiers of both Sides are reported to have outdone themselves, the Victory fell to the Romans. Whereupon the Enemy were obliged once more to sue for a Peace, which was again granted them, though upon much harder Conditions than before.

The Romans, by the happy Conclusion of this War, had so highly advanced themselves in the Opinion of the neighbouring States, that the Athenians, with the greatest Part of Greece, being at this Time miserably enslaved by King Philip of Macedon, unanimously petitioned the Senate for Assistance. A Fleet, with a sufficient Number of Land Forces, was presently dispatched to their Relief; by whose Valour the Tyrant, after several Defeats, was compelled to restore all Greece to their ancient Liberties, obliging himself to pay an annual Tribute to the Conquerors (a).

Hannibal, after his late Defeat, had applied himself to Antiochus King of Syria, who at this Time was making great Preparations against the Romans. Acilius Glabrio was first sent to oppose him, and had the Fortune to give him several Defeats; when Cornelius Scipia, the Roman Admiral, engaging with the King's Forces at Sea, under the Command of Hannibal, entirely ruined the whole Fleet. Which Victory being immediately followed by another as signal at Land, the effeminate Prince was contented to purchase a Peace at the Price of almost half his Kingdom (b).

The victorious Romans had scarce concluded the publick Rejoicings on Account of the late Success, when the Death of King Philip of Macedon presented them with an Occasion of a more glorious Triumph. His Son Perseus, that succeeded, resolving to break with the Senate, applied himself wholly to raising Forces, and procuring other Necessaries for a War. Never were greater Appearances in the Field than on both Sides, most of the considerable Princes in the World being engaged in this Quarrel. But Fortune still declared for the Romans, and the greatest Part of Perseus's prodigious Army was cut off by the Consul Emilius, and the King obliged to surrender himself into the Hands of the Conqueror (c). Authors that write of the four Monarchies, here fix the End of the Macedonian Empire.

But Rome could not think herself secure amongst all these Conquests, while her old Rival Carthage was yet standing: So that upon a slight Provocation, the City, after three Years Siege, was taken, and utterly rased, by the Valour of Publius Scipio, Grandson, by Adoption, to him that conquered Hannibal (d).

Not long after, Attalus, King of Pergamus, dying without Issue, left his vast Territories to the Romans (a). And what of Africa remained unconquered was for the most Part reduced in the Jugurthine War that immediately followed; Jugurtha himself, after several Defeats, being taken Prisoner by Marius, and brought in Triumph to Rome (b).

And now after the Defeat of the Teutones and Cimbri, that had made an Inroad into Italy, with several lesser Conquests in Asia and other Parts, the Mithridatic War, and the Civil War between Marius and Sylla, broke out both in the same Year (c). Sylla had been sent General against Mithridates King of Pontus, who had seized on the greatest Part of Asia and Achaia in an hostile Manner; when, before he was got out of Italy, Sulpicius, the Tribune of the People, and one of Marius's Faction, preferred a Law to recall him, and to depute Marius in his Room. Upon this Sylla, leading back his Army, and overthrowing Marius and Sulpicius in his Way, having settled Affairs at Rome, and banished the Authors of the late Sedition, returned to meet the foreign Enemy (d). His first Exploit was the Taking of Athens, and Ruining the famous Mole in the Haven (e) Piræum. Afterwards, in two Engagements, he killed and took near 130,000 of the Enemy, and compelled Mithridates to sue for a Truce (f). In the mean Time Marius, being called Home by the new Consuls, had exercised all Manner of Cruelty at Rome; whereupon, taking the Opportunity of the Truce, Sylla once more marched back towards Italy. Marius was dead before his Return (g); but his two Sons, with the Consuls, raised several Armies to oppose him. But some of the Troops being drawn over to his Party, and the others routed, he entered the City, and disposed all Things at his Pleasure, assuming the Title and Authority of a perpetual Dictator. But having regulated the State, he laid down that Office, and died in Retirement (h).

Mithridates had soon broke the late Truce, and invaded Bithynia and Asia, with as great Fury as ever; when the Roman General Lucullus, routing his vast Armies by Land and Sea, chased them quite out of Asia: and had infallibly put an happy Conclusion to the War, had not Fortune reserved that Glory for Pompey (i). He being deputed in the Room of Lucullus, after the Defeat of the new Forces of Mithridates, compelled him to fly to his Father-in-law Tigranes King of Armenia. Pompey followed with his Army; and struck such a Terror into the whole Kingdom, that Tigranes was constrained, in an humble Manner, to present himself to the General, and offer his Realm and Fortune to his Disposal. At this Time the Catilinarian Conspiracy broke out, more famous for the Obstinacy than the Number of the Rebels; but this was immediately extinguished by the timely Care of Cicero, and the happy Valour of Antony. The Senate, upon the News of the extraordinary Success of Pompey, were under some Apprehension of his affecting the Supreme Command at his Return, and altering the Constitution of the Government. But when they saw him dismiss his vast Army at Brundisium, and proceed in the rest of his Journey to the City, with no other Company than his ordinary Attendants, they received him with all the Expressions of Complacency and Satisfaction, and honoured him with a splendid Triumph (a).

C H A P. V.

Of the ROMAN Affairs, from the Beginning of the first Triumvirate, to the End of the Twelve Cæsars.

THE three Persons, that at this Time bore the greatest Sway in the State, were Crassus, Pompey, and Cæsar. The first, by Reason of his prodigious Wealth; Pompey, for his Power with the Soldiers and Senate; and Cæsar, for his admirable Eloquence, and a peculiar Nobleness of Spirit. When now taking Advantage of the Consulship of Cæsar, they entered into a solemn Agreement to let nothing pass in the Commonwealth without their joint Approbation (b). By virtue of this Alliance, they had in a little Time procured themselves the three best Provinces in the Empire, Crassus, Asia; Pompey, Spain; and Cæsar, Gaul. Pompey, for the better retaining his Authority in the City, chose to manage his Province by Deputies (c); the other two entered on their Governments in Person. But Crassus soon after, in an Expedition he undertook against the Parthians, had the ill Fortune to lose the greatest Part of his Army, and was himself treacheroufully murdered (a). In the mean Time Cæsar was performing Wonders in Gaul. No less than 40,000 of the Enemy he had killed, and taken more Prisoners: And nine Years together (which was the whole Time of his Government) deserved a Triumph for the Actions of every Campaign (b). The Senate, amazed at the strange Relation of his Victories, were easily inclined to suspect his Power: So that taking the Opportunity when he petitioned for a second Consulship, they ordered him to disband his Army, and appear as a private Person at the Election (c). Cæsar endeavoured by all Means to come to an Accommodation: But finding the Senate violently averse to his Interest, and resolved to hear nothing but what they first proposed (d), he was constrained to march towards Italy with his Troops, to terrify or force them into a Compliance. Upon the News of his Approach, the Senate, with the greatest Part of the Nobility, passing over into Greece, he entered the City without Opposition, and, creating himself Consul and Dictator, hastened with his Army into Spain; where the Troops under Pompey's Deputies were compelled to submit themselves to his Disposal. With this Reinforcement he advanced towards Macedonia, where the Senate had got together a prodigious Army under the Command of Pompey. In the first Engagement he received a considerable Defeat: But the whole Power on both Sides being drawn up on the Plains of Thessaly, after a long Dispute the Victory fell to Cæsar, with the intire Ruin of the adverse Party. Pompey fled directly towards Egypt, and Cæsar with his victorious Legions immediately followed. Hearing, at his Arrival, that Pompey had been killed by Order of King Ptolemy, he laid close Siege to Alexandria the capital City; and having made himself absolute Master of the Kingdom, committed it to the Care of Cleopatra, Sister to the late King (e). Scipio and Juba he soon after overcame in Africa, and Pompey's two Sons in Spain (f). And now being received at his Return with the general Applause of the People and Senate, and honoured with the glorious Titles of Father of his Country, and perpetual Dictator, he was designing an Expedition into Parthia, when, after the Enjoyment of the supreme Command no more than five Months, he was murdered in the Senate-house (g); Brutus and Cassius, with most of the other Conspirators, being his particular Friends, and such as he had obliged in the highest Manner.

(a) Plutarch in Crasso. (b) Paterc. l. 2. (c) Ibid. c. 49. (d) Ibid. c. 50.
 (e) Suet. in Jul. Cæs. c. 35. (f) Ibid. c. 50. (g) Paterc. l. 2. c. 56.

A Civil War necessarily followed, in which the Senate, consisting for the most Part of such as had embraced the Faction of Pompey, declared in Favour of the Assassins, while Mark Antony the Consul undertook the Revenge of Cæsar. With this Pretence he exercised all Manner of Tyranny in the City, and had no other Design but to secure the chief Command to himself. At last the Senate were obliged to declare him an Enemy to the State; and, in Pursuance of their dicta, raised an Army to oppose him under the Command of Hirtius and Pansa the new Consuls, and Octavius, Nephew and Heir to Cæsar (a). In the first Engagement Antony was defeated; but Hirtius being killed in the Fight, and Pansa dying immediately after, the sole Command of the Army came into the Hands of Octavius (b). The Senate, before the late Victory, had expressed an extraordinary Kindness for him, and honoured him with several Marks of their particular Esteem: But now being freed from the Danger they apprehended from Antony, they soon altered their Measures; and, taking little Notice of him any longer, decreed to the two Heads of the late Conspiracy, Brutus and Cassius, the two Provinces of Syria and Macedonia, whither they had retired upon Commission of the Fact (c). Octavius was very sensible of their Designs, and thereupon was easily induced to conclude a Peace with Antony; and soon after entering into an Association with him and Lepidus, as his Uncle had done with Crassus and Pompey, he returned to Rome, and was elected Consul when under twenty Years of Age (d). And now, by the Power of him and his two Associates, the old Senate was for the most Part banished, and a Law preferred by his Colleague Pedius, That all who had been concerned in the Death of Cæsar should be proclaimed Enemies to the Commonwealth, and proceeded against with all Extremity (e). To put this Order into Execution, Octavius and Antony advanced with the Forces under their Command toward Macedonia, where Brutus and Cassius had got together a numerous Army to oppose them; both Parties meeting near the City Philippi, the Traitors were defeated, and the two Commanders died soon after by their own Hands (f). And now for ten Years all Affairs were managed by the Triumviri; when Lepidus, setting up for himself in Sicily, was contented, upon the Arrival of Octavius, to compound for his Life, with the dishonourable Resignation of his Share in the Government (g). The Friendship of Octavius and Antony was not of much longer Continuance: For the latter being, for several Enormities, declared an Enemy to the State, was finally routed in a Sea-Engagement at Actium, and, flying thence with his Mistress Cleopatra, killed himself soon after, and left the sole Command in the Hands of Octavius. He, by his Prudence and Moderation, gained such an intire Interest in the Senate and People, that when he offered to lay down all the Authority he was invested with above the rest, and to restore the Commonwealth to the ancient Constitution, they unanimously agreed in this Opinion, That their Liberty was sooner to be parted with, than so excellent a Prince. However, to avoid all Offence, he rejected the very Names he thought might be displeasing, and, above all Things, the Title of Dictator, which had been so odious in Sylla and Cæsar. By this Means he was the Founder of that Government which continued ever after in Rome. The new Acquisitions to the Empire were, in his Time, very considerable; Cantabria, Aquitania, Pannonia, Dalmatia, and Illyricum being wholly subdued: The Germans were driven beyond the River Albis, and two of their Nations, the Suevi and Sicambri, transplanted into Gaul (a).

Tiberius, though in Augustus's Time he had given Proofs of an extraordinary Courage in the German War (b); yet upon his own Accession to the Crown is memorable for no Exploit but the Reducing of Cappadocia into a Roman Province (c); and this was owing more to his Cunning than his Valour. And at last, upon his infamous Retirement into the Island Caprea, he grew so strangely negligent of the publick Affairs, as to send no Lieutenants for the Government of Spain and Syria, for several Years; to let Armenia be over-run by the Parthians, Mæsia by the Dacians and the Sarmatians, and almost all Gaul by the Germans; to the extreme Danger as well as Dishonour of the Empire (d). Caligula, as he far exceeded his Predecessor in all Manner of Debauchery, so, in relation to martial Affairs, was much his Inferior. However, he is famous for a Mock-Expedition that he made against the Germans; when, arriving in that Part of the Low Countries which is opposite to Britain, and receiving into his Protection a fugitive Prince of the Island, he sent glorious Letters to the Senate, giving an Account of the happy Conquest of the whole Kingdom (e). And soon after making his Soldiers fill their Helmets with Cockle-shells and Pebbles, which he called, The Spoils of the Ocean (a), returned to the City to demand a Triumph. And when that Honour was denied him by the Senate, he broke out into such extravagant Cruelties, that he even compelled them to cut him off, for the Security of their own Persons (b). Nay, he was so far from entertaining any Desire of benefiting the Public, that he often complained of his ill Fortune, because no signal Calamity happened in his Time, and made it his constant Wish, That either the utter Destruction of an Army, or some Plague, Famine, Earthquake, or other extraordinary Desolation, might continue the Memory of his Reign to succeeding Ages (c).

Caligula being taken off, the Senate assembled in the Capitol, to debate about the Extinguishing the Name and Family of the Cæsars, and Restoring the Commonwealth to the old Constitution (d). When one of the Soldiers that were ransacking the Palace, lighting casually upon Claudius, Uncle to the late Emperor, where he had hid himself in a Corner behind the Hangings, pulled him out to the rest of his Gang, and recommended him as the fittest Person in the World to be Emperor. All were strangely pleased at the Motion; and taking him along with them by Force, lodged him among the Guards (e). The Senate, upon the first Information, sent immediately to stop their Proceedings: But not agreeing among themselves, and hearing the Multitude call out for one Governor, they were at last constrained to confirm the Election of the Soldiers; especially since they had pitched upon such an easy Prince as would be wholly at their Command and Disposal (f). The Conquest of Britain was the most memorable Thing in his Time; owing partly to an Expedition that he made in Person, but chiefly to the Valour of his Lieutenants Ostorius, Scapula, Aulus Plautius, and Vespasian. The Bounds of the Empire were in his Reign as followeth; Mesopotamia in the East, the Rhine and Danube in the North; Mauritania in the South, and Britain in the West (g).

The Roman Arms cannot be supposed to have made any considerable Progress under Nero; especially when Suetonius tells us, he neither hoped nor desired the Enlargement of the Empire (h). However, two Countries were in his Time reduced into Roman Provinces; the Kingdom of Pontus, and the Cottian Alps, or that Part of the Mountains which divides Dauphiné and Piedmont. Britain and Armenia were once both lost (i), and not without great Difficulty recovered. And indeed, his Averseness to the Camp made him far more odious to the Soldiers, than all his other Vices to the People: So that when the Citizens had the Patience to endure him for fourteen Years, the Army under Galba, his Lieutenant in Spain, were constrained to undertake his Removal.

Galba is acknowledged on all Hands for the great Reformer of martial Discipline; and though, before his Accession to the Empire, he had been famous for his Exploits in Germany, and other Parts (a); yet the Shortness of his Reign hindered him from making any Advancements afterwards. His Age and Severity were the only Causes of his Ruin: The first of which rendered him contemptible, and the other odious. And the Remedy he used to appease these Dissatisfactions did but ripen them for Revenge. For immediately upon his adopting Piso, by which he hoped to have pacified the People, Otho, who had ever expected that Honour, and was now enraged at his Disappointment, (b) upon Application made to the Soldiers, easily procured the Murder of the old Prince and his adopted Son; and by that Means was himself advanced to the Imperial Dignity.

About the same Time the German Army under Vitellius having an equal Aversion to the old Emperor with those of Rome, had sworn Allegiance to their own Commander. Otho, upon the first Notice of their Designs, had sent to offer Vitellius an equal Share in the Government with himself (c). But all Proposals for an Accommodation being refused, and himself compelled, as it were, to march against the Forces that were sent towards Italy, he had the good Fortune to defeat them in three small Engagements. But having been worsted in a greater Fight, at Bebriacum, though he had still sufficient Strength for carrying on the War, and expected daily a Reinforcement from several Parts (d); yet he could not, by all the Arguments in the World, be prevailed with to hazard another Battle; but, to end the Contention, killed himself with his own Hands. On this Account Pagan Authors, though they represent his Life as the most exact Picture of unmanly Softness, yet they generally confess his Death equal to the noblest of Antiquity; and the same Poet (e), that has given him the lasting Title of Mollis Otho, has yet set him in Competition with the famous Cato, in Reference to the final Action of his Life.

It has been observed of Vitellius, that he obtained the Empire by the sole Valour of his Lieutenants, and lost it purely on his own Account. - His extreme Luxury and Cruelty were for this Reason the more detestable, because he had been advanced to that Dignity, under the Notion of the Patron of his Country, and the Restorer of the Rights and Liberties of the People. Within eight Months Time the Provincial Armies had unanimously agreed on Vespasian (a) for their Emperor; and the Tyrant, after he had been strangely mangled by the extreme Fury of the Soldiers and Rabble, was at last dragged into the River Tyber (b).

The Republick was so far from making any Advancement under the Disturbance of the three last Reigns, that she must necessarily have felt the fatal Consequences of them, had she not been seasonably relieved by the happy Management of Vespasian. In was a handsome Turn of some of his Friends, when, by Order of Caligula, his Bosom had, by Way of Punishment, been stuffed with Dirt, to put this Interpretation on the Accident, that the Commonwealth being miserably abused, and even trodden under Foot, should hereafter fly to his Bosom for Protection (c). And indeed, he seems to have made it his whole Care and Design to reform the Abuses of the City and State, occasioned by the Licentiousness of the late Times. Nine Provinces he added to the Empire (d), and was so very exact in all Circumstances of his Life and Conduct, that one, who has examined them both with all the Niceness imaginable, can find nothing in either that deserves Reprehension, except an immoderate Desire of Riches (e). And he covertly excuses him for this, by extolling at the same Time his extraordinary Magnificence and Liberality (f).

But perhaps he did not more oblige the World by his own Reign, than by leaving so admirable a Successor as his Son Titus; the only Prince in the World that has the Character of never doing an ill Action. He had given sufficient Proof of his Courage in the famous Siege of Jerusalem, and might have met with as good Success in other Parts, had he not been prevented by an untimely Death, to the universal Grief of Mankind.

But then Domitian so far degenerated from the two excellent Examples of his Father and Brother, as to seem more emulous of copying Nero and Caligula. However, as to martial Affairs, he was as happy as most of his Predecessors, having, in four Expeditions, subdued the Catti, Daci, and the Sarmatians, and extinguished a Civil War in the first Beginning (a). By this Means he had so entirely gained the Affections of the Soldiers, that when we meet with his nearest Relations, and even his very Wife engaged in his Murther (b), yet we find the Army so extremely dissatisfied, as to have wanted only a Leader to revenge his Death (c).

CH A P. VI.

Of the ROMAN Affairs from Domitian to the End of Constantine the Great.

THE two following Emperors have been deservedly stiled the Restorers of the Roman Grandeur; which by Reason of the Viciousness or Negligence of the former Princes, had been extremely impaired.

Nerva, though a Person of extraordinary Courage and Virtue, yet did not enjoy the Empire long enough to be on any other Account so memorable, as for substituting so admirable a Successor in his Room as Trajan.

It was he, that for the Happiness which attended his Undertakings, and for his just and regular Administration of the Government, has been set in Competition even with Romulus himself. It was he that advanced the Bounds of the Empire farther than all his Predecessors; reducing into Roman Provinces the five vast Countries of Dacia, Affyria, Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Arabia (a). And yet his prudent Management in Peace has been generally preferred to his Exploits in War; his Justice, Candour, and Liberality having gained him such an universal Esteem and Veneration, that he was even deified before his Death.

(a) Eutrop. lib. 8.

Adrian's Character was generally more of the Scholar than the Soldier: Upon which Account, as much as out of Envy to his Predecessor, he slighted three of the Provinces that had been taken by Trajan, and was contented to fix the Bounds of the Empire at the River Euphrates (a). But perhaps he is the first of the Roman Emperors that ever took a Circuit round his Dominions, as we are assured he did (b).

Antoninus Pius studied more the Defence of the Empire, than the Enlargement of it. However, his admirable Prudence, and strict Reformation of Manners, rendered him perhaps as serviceable to the Commonwealth as the greatest Conquerors.

The two Antonini, Marcus and Lucius, were they that made the first Division of the Empire. They are both famous for a successful Expedition against the Parthians: And the former, who was the longest Liver, is especially remarkable for his extraordinary Learning, and strict Profession of Stoicism; whence he has obtained the Name of the Philosopher.

Commodus was as noted for all Manner of Extravagancies, as his Father had been for the contrary Virtues, and, after a very short Enjoyment of the Empire, was murdered by one of his Mistresses (c).

Pertinax too was immediately cut off by the Soldiers, who found him a more rigid Exactor of Discipline, than they had been lately used to. And now claiming to themselves the Privilege of chusing an Emperor, they fairly exposed the Dignity to Sale (d).

Didius Julian was the highest Bidder, and was thereupon invested with the Honour. But as he only exposed himself to Ridicule, by such a mad Project, so he was in an Instant made away with, in Hopes of another Bargain. Zosimus makes him no better than a Sort of an Emperor in a Dream (e).

But the Roman Valour and Discipline were in a great Measure restored by Severus. Besides a famous Victory over the Parthians, the old Enemies of Rome, he subdued the greatest Part of Persia and Arabia, and marching into This Island, Britain, delivered the poor Natives from the miserable Tyranny of the Scots and Picts, which an excellent Historian (f) calls the greatest Honour of his Reign.

Antoninus Caracalla had as much of a martial Spirit in him as his Father, but died before he could design any Thing memo-nable, except an Expedition against the Parthians, which he had just undertaken.

Opilius Macrinus and his Son Diadumen had made very little Noise in the World, when they were cut off without much Disturbance, to make Room for Heliogabalus, Son of the late Emperor.

If he was extremely pernicious to the Empire by his extravagant Debaucheries, his Successor Alexander Severus was as serviceable to the State in restoring Justice and Discipline. His noblest Exploit was an Expedition against the Persians, in which he overcame their famous King Xerxes (a).

Maximin, the first that from a common Soldier aspired to the Empire, was soon taken off by Pupienus, and he with his Colleague Balbinus, quickly followed, leaving the supreme Command to Gordian, a Prince of great Valour and Fortune, and who might probably have extinguished the very Name of the Persians (b), had he not been treacherously murdered by Philip, who, within a very little Time, suffered the like Fortune himself.

Decius, in the former Part of his Reign, had been very successful against the Scythians and other barbarous Nations; but was at last killed, together with his Son, in an unfortunate Engagement (c).

But then Gallus not only struck up a shameful League with the Barbarians, but suffered them to over-run all Thrace, Thessaly, Macedon, Greece (d), &c.

They were just threatening Italy, when his Successor Æmilian chased them off with a prodigious Slaughter: And, upon his Promotion to the Empire, promised the Senate to recover all the Roman Territories that had been entirely lost, and to clear those that were over-run (e). But he was prevented after three Months Reign, by the common Fate of the Emperors of that Time.

After him Valerian was so unfortunate as to lose the greatest Part of his Army in an Expedition against the Persians, and to be kept Prisoner himself in that Country till the Time of his Death (f).

Upon the Taking of Valerian by the Persians, the Management of Affairs was committed to his Son Gallienus; a Prince so extremely negligent and vicious, as to become the equal Scorn and Contempt of both Sexes (a) : The Looseness of his Government gave Occasion to the Usurpation of the Thirty Tyrants, of whom some indeed truly deserved that Name ; others were Persons of great Courage and Virtue, and very serviceable to the Commonwealth (b). In his Time, the Almaini, after they had wasted all Gaul, broke into Italy. Dacia, which had been gained by Trajan, was entirely lost ; all Greece, Macedon, Pontus, and Asia over-run by the Goths. The Germani too had proceeded as far as Spain, and taken the famous City Tarraco, now Tarragona, in Catalonia (c).

This desperate State of Affairs was in some Measure redressed by the happy Conduct of Claudius ; who, in less than two Years Time, routed near three hundred thousand Barbarians, and put an entire End to the Gothick War : Nor were his other Accomplishments inferior to his Valour ; an elegant Historian (d) having found in him the Virtue of Trajan, the Piety of Antoninus, and the Moderation of Augustus.

Quintilius was, in all Respects, comparable to his Brother ; whom he succeeded not on Account of his Relation, but his Merits (e). But, reigning only seventeen Days, it was impossible he could do any Thing more than raise an Expectation in the World.

If any of the Barbarians were left within the Bounds of the Empire by Claudius, Aurelian entirely chased them out. In one single War he is reported to have killed a Thousand of the Sarmatians with his own Hands (f). But his noblest Exploit was the Conquering the famous Zenobia, Queen of the East (as she styled herself) and the Taking her capital City Palmyra. At his Return to Rome there was scarce any Nation in the World, out of which he had not a sufficient Number of Captives to grace his Triumph : The most considerable were the Indians, Arabians, Goths, Franks, Suevians, Saracens, Vandals, and Germans (g).

Tacitus was contented to shew his Moderation and Justice, in the quiet Management of the Empire, without any hostile Design : Or, had he expressed any such Inclinations, his short Reign must necessarily have hindered their Effect.

Probus, to the wise Government of his Predecessor, added the Valour and Conduct of a good Commander : It was he that obliged the barbarous Nations to quit all their Footing in Gaul, Illyricum, and several Provinces of the Empire; infomuch that the very Parthians sent him flattering Letters, confessing the dismal Apprehensions they entertained of his Designs against their Country, and beseeching him to favour them with a Peace (a).

There was scarce any Enemy left to his Successor Carus, except the Persians; against whom he accordingly undertook an Expedition: But after two or three successful Engagements, died with the Stroke of a Thunderbolt (b).

His two Sons, Carinus and Numerian, were of so opposite a Genius, that one is generally represented as the worst; the other as the best of Men. Numerian was soon treacherously murdered by Aper: Who together with the other Emperor Carinus, in a very little Time, gave Way to the happy Fortune of Dio-clesian, the most successful of the latter Emperors; so famous for his prodigious Exploits in Egypt, Persia and Armenia, that a Roman Author (c) has not stuck to compare him with Jupiter, as he does his Son Maximilian with Hercules.

Constantius Chlorus and Galerius were happier than most of their Predecessors, by dying, as they had for the most Part lived, in Peace.

Nor are Severus and Maximilian on any Account very remarkable, except for leaving so admirable a Successor, as the famous CONSTANTINE; who ridding himself of his two Competitors, Licinius and Maxentius, advanced the Empire to its ancient Grandeur. His happy Wars, and wise Administration in Peace, having gained him the Surname of The GREAT, an Honour unknown to former Emperors: Yet in this Respect he is justly reputed unfortunate, that, by removing the Imperial Seat from Rome to Constantinople, he gave Occasion to the utter Ruin of Italy.

C H A P. VII.

Of the ROMAN Affairs from Constantine the Great to the Taking of ROME by Odoacer, and the Ruin of the Western Empire.

THOUGH the three Sons of Constantine at first divided the Empire into three distinct Principalities; yet it was afterwards reunited under the longest Survivor Constantius. The Wars between him and Magentius, as they proved fatal to the Tyrant, so were they extremely prejudicial to the whole State; which at this Time was involved in such unhappy Difficulties, as to be very unable to bear so excessive Loss of Men, no less than 54000 being killed on both Sides (a). And perhaps this was the chief Reason of the ill Success, which constantly attended that Emperor in the Eastern Wars: For the Persians were all along his Superiors; and when at last a Peace was concluded, the Advantage of the Conditions lay on their Side.

Julian, as he took effectual Care for the Security of the other Bounds of the Empire; so his Designs against the most formidable Enemies, the Persians, had all Appearance of Success; but that he lost his Life before they could be fully put in Execution.

Jovian was no sooner elected Emperor, but, being under some Apprehension of a Rival in the West, he immediately struck up a most dishonourable Peace with the Persians, at the Price of the famous City Nisibis, and all Mesopotamia. For which base Action, as he does not fail of an Invektive from every Historian; so particularly Ammianus Marcellinus (b) and Zosimus have taken the Pains to shew, that he was the first Roman Governor who resigned up the least Part of their Dominions upon any Account.

Valentinian the First has generally the Character of an excellent Prince: But he seems to have been more studious of obliging his Subjects, by an easy and quiet Government, than desirous of acting any Thing against the encroaching Enemies.

Gratian too, though a Prince of great Courage and Experience in War, was able to do no more than to settle the single Province of Gaul: But he is extremely applauded by Historians for taking such extraordinary Care in the Business of a Successor: For being very sensible how every Day produced worse Effects in the Empire, and that the State, if not at the last Gasps, yet was very nigh beyond all Hopes of Recovery; he made it his whole Study to find out a Person that should, in all Respects, be capacitated for the noble Work of the Deliverance of his Country. The Man he pitched upon was Theodosius, a Native of Spain; who, being now invested with the Command of the East, upon the Death of Gratian, remained sole Emperor. And, indeed, in a great Measure, he answered the Expectation of the World, proving the most resolute Defender of the Empire in its declining Age. But for his Colleague Valentinian the Second, he was cut off without having done any Thing that deserves our Notice.

Under Honorius Things returned to their former desperate State, the barbarous Nations getting Ground on all Sides, and making every Day some Diminution in the Empire; till, at last, Alaric, King of the Goths, wasting all Italy, proceeded to Rome itself; and being contented to set a few Buildings on Fire, and rattle the Treasuries, retired with his Army (a): So that this is rather a Disgrace than a Destruction of the City. And Nero is supposed to have done more Mischief when he set it on Fire in Jest, than it now suffered from the barbarous Conqueror.

Valentinian the Third, at his Accession to the Empire, gave great Hopes of his proving the Author of a happy Revolution (b); and he was very fortunate in the War against the famous Attila the Hun; but his Imprudence, in putting to Death his best Commander Ætius, hastened very much the Ruin of the Roman Cause, the barbarous Nations now carrying all before them, without any considerable Opposition.

By this Time the State was given over as desperate; and what Princes followed 'till the Taking of the City by Odoacer, were only a Company of miserable, short-lived Tyrants, remarkable for nothing but the Meanness of their Extraction, and the Poverty of their Government; so that Historians generally pass them over in Silence, or at most with the bare Mention of their Names.

(a) Paul, Diacon, & Pompeius Lætus.

(b) Pomponius Lætus.

The best Account of them we can meet with, is as follows : Maximus, who, in order to his own Promotion, had procured the Murther of Valentinian, soon after compelled his Widow Eudoxia to accept of him as a Husband; when the Empress, entertaining a mortal Hatred for him on many Accounts, sent to Genferic, a famous King of the Vandals, and a Confederate of the late Emperor's, desiring his Assistance for the Deliverance of herself and the City from the Usurpation of the Tyrant. Genferic easily obeyed; and, landing with a prodigious Army in Italy, entered Rome without any Opposition; where, contrary to his Oath and Promise, he seized on all the Wealth, and carried it, with several Thousands of the Inhabitants, into Africk (a).

Avitus, the General in Gaul, was the next that took upon him the Name of Emperor, which he resigned within eight Months (b).

Majorianus succeeded; and after three Years left the Honour to Severus, or Severian; who had the Happiness, after four Years Reign, to die a natural Death (c).

After him, Anthemius was elected Emperor, who lost his Life and Dignity in a Rebellion of his Son-in-Law Ricimer (d). And then Olybrius was sent from Constantinople too, with the same Authority; but died within seven Months (e).

Liarius, or Glycerius, who had been elected in his Room by the Soldiers, was immediately almost deposed by Nepos; and he himself quickly after by Orestes (f); who made his Son Augustus, or Augustulus, Emperor. And now Odoacer, King of the Heruli, with an innumerable Multitude of the barbarous Nations, ravaging all Italy, approached to Rome, and entering the City without any Resistance, and deposing Augustulus, secured the Imperial Dignity to himself; and though he was forced afterwards to give Place to Theoderic the Goth, yet the Romans had never after the least Command in Italy.

PART II. BOOK I.

Of the CITY.

CHAP. I.

Of the Pomœrium, and of the Form and Bigness of the CITY, according to the Seven Hills.

BEFORE we come to please ourselves with a particular View of the City, we must, by all Means, take Notice of the Pomœrium, for the Singularity of the Custom, to which it owed its Original. Livy defines the Pomœrium, in general, to be the Space of Ground, both within and without the Walls, which the Augurs, at the first Buildings of Cities, solemnly consecrated, and on which no Edifices were suffered to be raised (a). But the Account which Plutarch gives us of this Matter, in Reference to Rome itself, is sufficient to satisfy our Curiosity; and is delivered by him to this Purpose: Romulus having sent for some of the Tuscans, to instruct him in the Ceremonies to be observed in laying the Foundations of his new City, the Work was begun in this Manner:

First, they dug a Trench, and threw into it the First-Fruits of all Things, either good by Custom, or necessary by Nature: And every Man taking a small Turf of Earth of the Country from whence he came, they all cast them in promiscuously together; making this Trench their Centre, they described the City in a Circle round it: Then the Founder fitted to a Plough

a brazen Plough-share; and yoking together a Bull and a Cow, drew a deep Line or Furrow round the Bounds; those, that followed after, taking Care that all the Clods fell inwards toward the City. They built the Wall upon this Line, which they called Pomærium, from Pone Mœnia. (a). Though the Phrase of Pomærium proferre be commonly used in Authors, to signify the Enlarging of the City; yet it is certain the City might be enlarged without that Ceremony. For Tacitus and Gallius declare no Person to have had a Right of extending the Pomærium, but such an one as had taken away some Part of an Enemy's Country in War; whereas it is manifest, that several great Men, who never obtained that Honour, increased the Buildings with considerable Additions.

It is remarkable, that the same Ceremony, with which the Foundations of their Cities were at first laid, they used too in destroying and rasing Places taken from the Enemy; which we find was begun by the Chief Commander's turning up some of the Walls with a Plough (b).

As to the Form and Bigness of the City, we must follow the common Direction of the Seven Hills, whence came the Phrase of Urbs Septicollis, and the like, so frequent with the Poets.

Of these Mons Palatinus has ever had the Preference; whether so called from the People Palantes, or Palatini; or from the Bleating and Strolling of Cattle, in Latin, Balare and Palare; or from Pales, the Pastoral Goddesses; or from the Burying-Place of Pallas, we find disputed, and undetermined among the Authors. It was in this Place that Romulus laid the Foundations of the City, in a Quadrangular Form; and here the same King and Tullus Hostilius kept their Courts, as did afterwards Augustus, and all the succeeding Emperors; on which Account, the Word Palatium came to signify a Royal Seat (c).

This Hill to the East has Mons Caelius; to the South, Mons Aventinus; to the West, Mons Capitolinus; to the North, the Forum (d).

In Compass twelve hundred Paces (e).

Mons Tarpeius took its Name from Tarpeia, a Roman Virgin, who betrayed the City to the Sabines in this Place (f). It was called too Mons Saturni and Saturnius, in Honour of Saturn, who is reported to have lived here in his Retirement, and was ever reputed the tutelar Deity of this Part of the City. It had afterwards the Denomination of Capitolinus, from the Head of a Man casually found there in digging for the Foundations of the famous Temple of Jupiter (a), called Capitolium, for the same Reason. This Hill was added to the City by Titus Tatius, King of the Sabines, when, having been first overcome in the Field by Romulus, he and his Subjects were permitted to incorporate with the Romans (b). It has, to the East, Mons Palatinus and the Forum; to the South, the Tiber; to the West, the level Part of the City; to the North, Collis Quirinalis (c).

In Compass seven Stadia or Furlongs (d).

Collis Quirinalis was so called either from the Temple of Quirinus, another Name of Romulus; or more probably from the Curetes, a People that removed hither with Tatius from Cures, a Sabine City (e). It afterwards changed its Name to Caballus, Mons Caballi and Caballinus, from the two marble Horses, with each a Man holding him, which are set up here. They are still standing; and, if the Inscription on the Pilasters be true, were the Work of Phidias and Praxiteles (f); made by those famous Masters to represent Alexander the Great, and his Bucephalus, and sent to Nero for a Present by Tiridates King of Armenia. This Hill was added to the City by Numa (g).

To the East, it has Mons Esquilinus and Mons Viminalis; to the South, the Forums of Cæsar and Nerva; to the West, the level Part of the City; to the North, Collis Hortulorum, and the Campus Martius (h).

In Compass almost three Miles (i).

Mons Cælius owes its Name to Cælius or Cæles, a famous Tuscan General, who pitched his Tents here, when he came to the Assistance of Romulus against the Sabines (k). Livy (l) and Dionysius (m) attribute the Taking of it in to Tullius Hostilius; but Strabo (n) to Ancus Martius. The other Names by which it was sometimes known, were Querculanus or Quercetulanus, and Augustus: The first occasioned by the Abundance of Oaks growing there; the other imposed by the Emperor Tiberius, when he had raised new Buildidgs upon it after a Fire (o).

One Part of this Hill was called Cæliolus, and Minor Cælius (p).

To the East, it has the City Walls; to the South, Mons Aventinus; to the West, Mons Palatinus; to the North, Mons Esquilinus (a).

In Compass about two Miles and a Half (b).

Mons Esquilinus was anciently called Cispinus and Oppius (c): The Name of Esquilinus was varied for the easier Pronunciation, from Exquilinus, a Corruption of Excubinus, ab Excubiis, from the Watch that Romulus kept there (d). It was taken in by Servius Tullius, (e), who had here his Royal Seat (f). Varro will have the Esquilie to be properly two Mountains (g); which Opinion has been since approved of by a curious Observer (h).

To the East, it has the City Walls; to the South, the Via Labicana; to the West, the Valley lying between Mons Caelius and Mons Palatinus; to the North, Collis Viminalis (i).

In Compass about four Miles (k).

* Vimina. Mons Viminalis derives its Name from the * Ofiers that grew there in great Plenty. This Hill was taken in by Servius Tullius (l).

To the East, it has the Campus Esquilinus; and to the South, Part of the Suburra and the Forum; to the West, Mons Quirinalis; to the North, the Vallis Quirinalis (m).

In Compass two Miles and a Half (n).

The Name of Mons Aventinus has given great Cause of Dispute among the Criticks, some deriving the Word from Aventinus, an Alban King (o); some from the River Avens (p); and others ab Avibus, from the Birds which used to fly thither in great Flocks from the Tiber (q). It was called too Murcius, from Murcia, the Goddess of Sleep, who had there a Sacellum, or little Temple (r); Collis Dianæ, from the Temple of Diana (s); and Remonius from Remus, who would have had the City begun in this Place, and was here buried (t). A. Gellius affirms (u), That this Hill, being all along reputed sacred, was never inclosed within the Bounds of the City 'till the Time of Naudius. But Eutropius (w) expressly attributes the Taking of it in to Ancus Martius; and an old Epigram inserted by Cuspinian, in his Comment on Cassiodorus, confirms the same.

To the East, it has the City Walls; to the South, the Campus Figulinus; to the West, the Tiber; to the North, Mons Palatinus (a).

In Circuit eighteen Stadia, or two Miles and a Quarter (b).

Besides these seven principal Hills, three others of inferior Note were taken in later Times.

Collis Hortulorum, or Hortorum, had its Name from the famous Gardens of Sallust adjoining to it (c). It was afterwards called Pincius, from the Pincii, a noble Family who had here their Seat (d). The Emperor Aurelian first inclosed it within the City Walls (e).

To the East and South it has the plainest Part of Mons Quirinalis; to the West, the Vallis Martia; to the North, the Walls of the City (f).

In Circuit about eighteen Stadia (g).

Janiculum, or Janicularis, was so called either from an old Town of the same Name, said to have been built by Janus; or, because Janus dwelt and was buried there (h); or, because it was a Sort of * Gate to the Romans, * Janua, whence they issued out upon the Tuscan (i). The sparkling Sands have at present given it the Name of Mons Aureus, and by Corruption Montorius (k). We may make two Observations about this Hill, from an Epigram of Martial: That it is the fittest Place to take one's Standing for a full Prospect of the City; and that it is less inhabited than the other Parts, by Reason of the Grossness of the Air (l). It is still famous for the Sepulchres of Numa, and Statius the Poet (m).

To the East and South it has the Tiber; to the West, the Fields; to the North, the Vatican (n).

In Circuit (as much of it as stands within the City-Walls) five Stadia (o).

Mons Vaticanus owes its Name to the Answers of the Vates or Prophets, that used to be given there; or from the God Vaticanus, or Vagitanus (p). It seems not to have been inclosed within the Walls 'till the Time of Aurelian.

This Hill was formerly famous for the Sepulchre of Scipio Africanus; some Remains of which are still to be seen (q). But it is more celebrated at present on Account of St. Peter's

It lies in the Shape of a Bow drawn up very high; the convex Part stretching almost a Mile (b).

As to the Extent of the whole City, the greatest we meet with in History was in the Reign of Valerian, who enlarged the Walls to such a Degree as to surround the Space of fifty Miles (c).

The Number of Inhabitants, in its flourishing State, Lipsius computes at four Millions (d).

At present the Compass of the City is not above thirteen Miles (e).

As to the Gates, Romulus built only three, or (as some will have it) four at most. But as the Buildings were enlarged, the Gates were accordingly multiplied; so that Pliny tells us, there were thirty-four in his Time.

The most remarkable were,

Porta Flumentana, so called, because it stood near the River.

Porta Flaminia, owing its Name to the Flaminian Way.

Porta Carmentalis, built by Romulus, and so called from Carmenta the Prophetess, Mother of Evander.

Porta Nævia, which Varro derives à memoribus, from the Woods which formerly stood near it.

Porta Saliana, deriving its Name from the Salt which the Sabines used to bring in at that Gate from the Sea, to supply the City.

Porta Capena, called so from Capua, an old City of Italy, to which the Way lay through this Gate. It is sometimes called Appia, from Appius the Censor; and Triumphalis, from the Triumphs in which the Procession commonly passed under there; and Fontinalis, from the Aqueducts which were raised over it: Whence Juvenal calls it Madida Capena; and Martial, Capena, grandi Porta quæ pluit guttâ.

The Tiber was passed over by eight Bridges; the Names of which are thus set down by Marlian, Milvius, Ælius, Vaticanus, Janiculensis, Cestius, Fabricius, Palatinus, and Sublicius.

C H A P. III.

Of the Places of Worship; particularly of the TEMPLES and LUCI.

BEFORE we proceed to take a View of the most remarkable Places set apart for the Celebration of Divine Service, it may be proper to make a short Observation about the general Names, under which we meet with them in Authors.

Templum then was a Place which had not been only dedicated to some Deity, but withal formerly consecrated by the Augurs.

Ædes Sacræ, were such as wanted that Consecration; which if they afterwards received, they changed their Names to Temples. Vid. Agel. L. XIV. C. 7.

Delubrum, according to Servius, was a Place that, under one Roof, comprehended several Deities.

Ædicula is only a Diminutive, and signifies no more than a little Ædes.

Sacellum may be derived the same Way from Ædes Sacræ. Festus tells us, it is a Place sacred to the Gods without a Roof.

It were endless to reckon up but the bare Names of all the Temples we meet with in Authors. The most celebrated on all Accounts were the Capitol and the Pantheon.

The

CAPITOLIUM

Temp^l PANTHEON vulgo Rotunda

The Capitol, or Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, was the Effect of a Vow made by Tarquinius Priscus in the Sabine War (a). But he had scarce laid the Foundations before his Death. His Nephew, Tarquin the Proud, finished it with the Spoils taken from the neighbouring Nations (b). But upon the Expulsion of the Kings, the Consecration was performed by Horatius the Consul (c). The Structure stood on a high Ridge, taking in four Acres of Ground. The Front was adorned with three Rows of Pillars, the other Sides with two (d). The Ascent from the Ground was by a Hundred Steps (e). The prodigious Gifts and Ornaments with which it was at several Times endowed, almost exceed Belief. Suetonius (f) tells us, that Augustus gave at one Time two thousand Pounds Weight of Gold: And in Jewels and precious Stones, to the Value of five hundred Seftertia. Livy and Pliny (g) surprise us with Accounts of the brazen Thresholds, the noble Pillars that Sylla removed thither from Athens out of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius; the gilded Roof, the gilded Shields, and those of solid Silver; the huge Vessels of Silver, holding three Measures; the Golden Chariot, &c. This Temple was first consumed by Fire in the Marian War, and then rebuilt by Sylla; who, dying before the Dedication, left that Honour to Quintus Catulus. This too was demolished in the Vitellian Sedition. Vespasian undertook a Third, which was burnt about the Time of his Death. Domitian raised the last and most glorious of all; in which the very Gilding amounted to twelve thousand Talents (h). On which Account Plutarch (i) has observed of that Emperor, that he was, like Midas, desirous of turning every Thing into Gold. There are very little Remains of it at present; yet enough to make a Christian Church (k).

The Pantheon was built by Marcus Agrippa, Son-in-Law to Augustus Cæsar; and dedicated either to Jupiter Ultor, or to Mars and Venus, or more probably, to all the Gods in general, as the very Name (quasi Tōν πάντων Θεῶν) implies. The Structure, according to Fabricius (l), is a Hundred and Forty Feet high, and about the same Breadth. But a later Author has increased the Number of Feet to a Hundred and Fifty-eight. The Roof is curiously vaulted, void Places being left here and there for the greater Strength. The Rafter were Pieces of Brass of Forty Feet in Length. There are no Windows in the whole Edifice, only a round Hole at the Top of the Roof, which serves very well for the Admission of the Light. Diametrically under, is cut a curious Gutter to receive the Rain. The Walls on the Inside are either solid Marble, or incrusted (a). The Front on the Outside was covered with brazen Plates gilt, the Top with silver Plates, which are now changed to Lead (b). The Gates were Brass, of extraordinary Work and Bigness (c).

This Temple is still standing with little Alteration, besides the Loss of the old Ornaments, being converted into a Christian Church by Pope Boniface III. or, as Polydore Virgil (d) has it, by Boniface IV. dedicated to St. Mary and all Saints, though the general Name be St. Mary de Rotonda (e). The most remarkable Difference is, that whereas heretofore they ascended by twelve Steps, they now go down as many to the Entrance (f).

The Ceremony of the Consecration of Temples (a Piece of Superstition very well worth our Notice) we cannot better apprehend, than by the following Account which Tacitus gives us of that Solemnity in Reference to the Capitol, when repaired by Vespasian: Though, perhaps, the chief Rites were celebrated upon the entire Raising of the Structure, this being probably intended only for the Hallowing the Floor.

Undecimo Kalendas Julias (g), &c. ' Upon the 21st of June, ' being a very clear Day, the whole Plot of Ground designed for ' the Temple was bound about with Fillets and Garlands. Such ' of the Soldiers as had lucky Names, entered first with Boughs ' in their Hands, taken from those Trees, which the Gods more ' especially delighted in. Next came the Vestal Virgins, with ' Boys and Girls whose Fathers and Mothers were living, and ' sprinkled the Place with Brook-Water, River-Water, and ' Spring-Water. Then Helvidius Priscus the Prætor (Plautus ' Ælian, one of the Chief Priests going before him) after he ' had performed the solemn Sacrifice of a Swine, a Sheep, and a ' Bullock, for the Purgation of the Floor, and laid the Entrails ' upon a green Turf, humbly besought Jupiter, Juno, Minerva ' and the other Deities Protectors of the Empire, that they ' would be pleased to prosper their present Undertaking, and ' accomplish, by their Divine Assistance, what human Piety had ' thus begun. Having concluded this Prayer, he put his Hand ' to the Fillets, to which the Ropes, with a great Stone fastened

‘ in them, had been tied for this Occasion; when immediately
 ‘ the whole Company of Priests, Senators and Knights, with ‘ the greatest Part of the common People, laying hold together
 ‘ on the Rope, with all the Expressions of Joy, drew the Stone ‘ into the Trench designed for the Foundation, throwing in ‘ Wedges of Gold, Silver, and other Metals which had never ‘ endured the Fire.’

Some curious Persons have observed this Similitude between the Shape of these old Temples and our modern Churches; That they had one Apartment more holy than the rest, which they termed Cella, answering to our Chancel or Choir: That the Porticoes in the Sides were in all Respects like to our Isles; and that our Navis, or Body of the Church, is an Imitation of their Basilica (a).

There are two other Temples particularly worth our Notice; not so much for the Magnificence of the Structure, as for the Customs that depend upon them, and the remarkable Use to which they were put. These are the Temples of Saturn and Janus.

The first was famous upon Account of serving for the Publick Treasury: The Reason of which some fancy to have been, because Saturn first taught the Italians to coin Money; or, as Plutarch conjectures, because, in the Golden Age under Saturn, all Persons were honest and sincere, and the Names of Fraud and Covetousness unknown to the World (b). But, perhaps, there might be no more in it, than that this Temple was one of the strongest Places in the City, and so fittest for that Use. Here were preserved all the public Registers and Records, among which were the Libri Elephantini, or great Ivory Tables, containing a List of all the Tribes, and the Schemes of the public Accounts.

The other was a square Piece of Building, (some say of entire Brass) so large as to contain a Statue of Janus five Feet high; with brazen Gates on each Side, which used always to be kept open in War, and shut in Time of Peace (c).

But the Romans were so continually engaged in Quarrels, that we find the last Custom but seldom put in Practice.

First, all the long Reign of Numa. Secondly, A. U. C. 519. upon the Conclusion of the first Punic War. Thirdly, by Augustus, A. U. C. 725. and twice more by the same Emperor A. U. C. 729. and again about the Time of our Saviour's Birth. Then by Nero, A. U. C. 811. Afterwards by Vespasian, A. U. C. 824. And lastly by Constantius, when, upon Magnen-

(b) Plutarch, in Problem, tius's Death, he was left sole Possessor of the Empire, A. U. C. 1105 (a).

Of this Custom Virgil gives us a noble Description :

*Sunt geminae belli portæ, sic nomine dicunt,
Religionæ sacrae, & sævi formidene Martis :
Centum æerci claudant vœlles æternaque ferri
Robora ; nec custos absistit limine Janus.
Hæc, ubi certa sedet patribus sententia pugnae ;
Ipse, Quirinali trabem cinctusque Gabino
Insignis, referat stridentia limina Consul ;
Ipse vocat pugnas (b).*

Sacred to Mars two stately Gates appear,
Made awful by the Dread of Arms and War ;
A hundred brazen Bolts from impious Pow'r
And everlasting Bars the Dome secure,
And watchful Janus guards his Temple Door.
Here when the Fathers have ordain'd to try
The Chance of Battle by their fix'd Decree,
The Consul, rich in his Gabinian Gown,
And Regal Pall, leads the Procession on ;
The sounding Hinges gravely turn about,
Rouse the imprison'd God, and let the Furies out.

Near the Temple of Janus there was a Street which took the same Name, inhabited, for the most Part, by Bankers and Usurers. It was very long, and divided by the different Names of Janus Summus, Janus Medius, and Janus Imus. The first and the last of these Partitions are mentioned by Horace, Lib. 1. Epist. 1.

——— Hæc Janus summus ab imo Perducit.

The other Tully speaks of in several Places of his Works (c). The Superstition of consecrating Groves and Woods to the Honour of the Deities, was a Practice very usual with the Ancients : For not to speak of those mentioned in the Holy Scripture, Pliny assures us, That Trees in old Time served for the Temples of the Gods. Tacitus reports this Custom of the old Germans ; Q. Curtius of the Indians, and almost all Writers of the old Druids. The Romans too were great Admirers of this Way of Worship, and therefore had their Luci in most Parts of the City, generally dedicated to some particular Deity.

The most probable Reason that can be given for this Practice, is taken from the common Opinion, That Fear was the main Principle of Devotion among the ignorant Heathens. And therefore such darksome and lonely Seats, putting them into a sudden Horror and Dread, made them fancy that there must necessarily something of Divinity inhabit there, which could produce in them such an Awe and Reverence at their Entrance.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Theatres, Amphitheatres, Cirçi, Naumachiæ, Odeæ, Stadia, and Xysti, and of the Campus Martius.

Theatres, so called from the Greek θεατρον, to see, owe their Original to Bacchus (a). They were usual in several Parts of Greece; and at last, after the same Manner as other Institutions, were borrowed thence by the Romans: That the Theatre and Amphitheatre were two different Sorts of Edifices, was never questioned, the former being built in the Shape of a Semicircle, the other generally Oval, so as to make the same Figure as if two Theatres should be joined together (b). Yet the same Place is often called by these Names in several Authors. They seem too to have been designed for quite different Ends; the Theatres for Stage Plays, the Amphitheatres for the greater Shows of Gladiators, wild Beasts, &c. The Parts of the Theatre and Amphitheatre, best worth our Observation, by Reason of the frequent Use in Classics, are as follow:

Scena was a Partition reaching quite cross the Theatre, being either Versatilis, or Ductilis, either to turn round or to draw up, for the presenting a new Prospect to the Spectators, as Servius has observed (c).

Proscenium was the Space of Ground just before the Scene, where the Pulpitum stood, into which the Actors came from behind the Scenes to perform (d).

(a) Polydor. It. g. de Reet. invent. lib. 3. cap. 13. (b) Ibid. (c) In Georg. 3.

The middle Part, or Area, of the Amphitheatre, was called Cavea, because it was considerably lower than the other Parts; whence perhaps the Name of Pit in our Play-houses was borrowed: And Arena, because it used to be strown with Sand, to hinder the Performer from slipping. Lipſus has taken Notice, that the whole Amphitheatre was often called by both these Names (a). And the Veroneſe ſtill call the Theatre, which remains almoſt entire in that City, the Arena (b).

There was a threefold Diſtinction of the Seats, according to the ordinary Division of the People into Senators, Knights, and Commons; the firſt Range was called Orcheſtra, from ὀρχησθαι, becauſe in that Part of the Græcian Theatres the Dances were performed; the ſecond, Equſtria; and the other Populæria (c).

Theatres, in the firſt Ages of the Commonwealth, were only Temporary, and compoſed of Wood, which ſometimes tumbled down with a great Deſtruction, as Dio (d) and Pliny (e) ſpeak of one particularly. Of theſe temporary Theatres, the moſt celebrated was that of M. Scaurus, mentioned by Pliny (f); the Scenes of which were divided into three Partitions one above another; the firſt conſiſting of 120 Pillars of Marble; the next of the like Number of Pillars, curiouſly wrought in Glaſs: The Top of all had ſtill the ſame Number of Pillars adorned with gilded Tablets. Between the Pillars were ſet 3000 Statues and Images of Braſs. The Cavea would hold 80000 Men. The Structure which Curio afterwards raiſed at the Funeral of his Father, tho' inferior to the former in Magnificence, yet was no leſs remarkable upon Account of the admirable Artifice and Contrivance. He built two ſpacious Theatres of Wood, ſo ordered with Hinges and other Neceſſaries, as to be able to turn round with very little Trouble. Theſe he ſet at firſt Back to Back for the Celebration of the Stage-plays and ſuch-like Diversions, to prevent the Diſorder that might otherwiſe ariſe by the Confuſion of the Scenes. Toward the latter End of the Day, pulling down the Scenes, and joining the two Fronts of the Theatres, he compoſed an exact Amphitheatre, in which he again obliged the People with a Show of Gladiators (g).

Pompey the Great was the firſt that undertook the Raiſing of a fixed Theatre, which he built very nobly with ſquare Stone; on which Account Tacitus (h) tells us he was ſeverely rephended for introducing a Cuſtom ſo different from that of their Forefathers,

(a) Lipſ in Amphitheat. (b) Harrop's Hiſtory of Italy. (c) Calanus de who were contented to see the like Performances, in Seats built only for the present Occasion, and in ancient Times standing only on the Ground. To this Purpose, I cannot omit an ingenious Reflection of Ovid, upon the Luxury of the Age he lived in, by comparing the honest Simplicity of the old Romans with the Vanity and Extravagance of the modern in this Particular :

Tunc neque marmoreo pendebant vela Theatro,

Nec fuerant liquido pulpita rubra croco.

Illic quas tulerant, nemoroso Palatia, frondes

Simpliciter posita: Scena sine arte fuit.

In gradibus sedit populus de cespite factis

Qualibet hirsutas fronde tegente comas (a).

No Pillars then of Ægypt's costly Stone,

No Purple Sails hung waving in the Sun,

No Flowers about the scented Seats were throw'n.

But Sylvan Bowers and shady Palaces,

Brought by themselves, secured them from the Rays.

Thus guarded and refreshed with humble Green,

Wond'ring they gaz'd upon the artless Scene :

Their Seats of homely Turf the Crowd would rear,

And cover with green Boughs their more disorder'd Hair.

Juvenal intimates, that this good old Custom remained still uncorrupted in several Parts of Italy :

ipsa dierum

Festorum herbofo colitur si quando Theatro

Majestas; tandemque redit ad pulpita notum

Exodium, cum personæ pallentis hiatum

In gremio matris formidat rusticus infans;

Æquales habitus illic, similemque videbis

Orchestram & populum ——— (b).

On Theatres of Turf in homely State,

Old Plays they act, old Feasts they celebrate;

The same rude Song returns upon the Crowd,

And by Tradition is for Wit allow'd.

The Mimick yearly gives the same Delights,

And in the Mother's Arms the clownish Infant frights.

Their Habits (undistinguish'd by Degree)

Some Remains of this Theatre of Pompey are still to be seen at Rome, as also of those other of Marcellus, Statilius Taurus, Tiberius and Titus, the second being almost entire (a).

The Circi were Places set apart for the Celebration of several Sorts of Games, which we will speak of hereafter. They were generally oblong, or almost in the Shape of a Bow (b), having a Wall quite round (c), with Ranges of Seats for the Convenience of the Spectators. At the Entrance of the Circus stood the Carcera, or Lifts, whence they started; and just by them one of the Metæ, or Marks; the other standing at the farther End to conclude the Race.

There were several of these Circi in Rome, as those of Flaminius, Nero, Caracalla; and Severus: But the most remarkable, as the very Name imports, was Circus Maximus, first built by Tarquinius Priscus (d). The Length of it was four Stadia, or Furlongs, the Breadth the like Number of Acres; with a Trench of ten Feet deep, and as many broad, to receive the Water; and Seats enough for 150,000 Men (e). It was extremely beautified and adorned by succeeding Princes, particularly by Julius Cæsar, Augustus, Caligula, Domitian, Trajan, and Heliogabulus; and enlarged to such a prodigious Extent, as to be able to contain, in their proper Seats, 260,000 Spectators (f).

The Naumachia, or Places for the Shows of Sea Engagements, are no where particularly described; but we may suppose them to be very little different from the Circos and Amphitheatres, since those Sort of Shows for which they were designed, were often exhibited in the aforementioned Places (g).

Odeum was a publick Edifice, much after the Manner of a Theatre (h), where the Musicians and Actors privately exercised before their Appearance on the Stage (i). Plutarch has described one of their Odeums at Athens (whence to be sure the Romans took the Hint of theirs) in the following Words: For the Contrivance of it, in the Inside it was full of Seats and Ranges of Pillars; and, on the Outside, the Roof or Covering of it was made from one Point at Top, with a great many Bendings, all shelving downward, in Imitation of the King of Persia's Pavilion (k).

The Stadia were Places in the Form of Circi, for the Running of Men and Horses (l). A very noble one Suetonius (m) tells us was built by Domitian.

The Xysti were Places built, after the Fashion of Porticos; for the Wrestlers to exercise in (a).

The Campus Martius, famous on so many Accounts, was a large plain field lying near the Tiber, whence we find it sometimes under the Name of Tiberinus. It was called Martius, because it had been consecrated by the old Romans to the God Mars.

Besides the pleasant Situation, and other natural Ornaments, the continual Sports and Exercises performed here, made it one of the most diverting Sights near the City. For,

Here the young Noblemen practised all Manner of Feats of Activity; learned the Use of all Sorts of Arms and Weapons. Here the Races, either with Chariots or single Horses, were undertaken. Besides this, it was nobly adorned with the Statues of famous Men, and with Arches, Columns, and Porticos, and other magnificent Structures. Here stood the Villa Publica, or Palace for the Reception and Entertainment of Ambassadors from foreign States, who were not allowed to enter the City. Several of the publick Comitia were held in this Field; and for that Purpose were the Septa or Ovilia, an Apartment inclosed with Rails, where the Tribes or Centuries went in one by one to give their Votes. Cicero, in one of his Epistles to Atticus, intimates a noble Design he had to make the Septa of Marble, and to cover them with a Roof, with the Addition of a stately Portico or Piazza all round. But we hear no more of this Project, and therefore may reasonably suppose, he was disappointed by the Civil Wars which broke out presently after.

Of the Curia, Senacula, Basilica, Fora, and Comitium.

THE Roman Curia (it signifies a publick Edifice) was of two Sorts, Divine and Civil: In the former, the Priests and Religious Orders met for the Regulation of the Rights and Ceremonies belonging to the Worship of the Gods: In the other, the Senate used to assemble, to consult about the public Concerns of the Commonwealth (a.) The Senate could not meet in such a

Curia,

Curia, unless it had been solemnly consecrated by the Augurs (a) and made of the same Nature as a Temple. Sometimes (at least) the Curia were no distinct Building, but only a Room or Hall in some public Place; as particularly Livy (b) and Pliny (c) speak of a Curia in the Comitium, though that itself were no entire Structure. The most celebrated Curia were,

Curia Hostilia, built by Tullius Hostilius, as Livy (d) informs us: And, Curia Pompeii, where the Senate assembled for the Effecting the Death of Julius Caesar (e).

Senaculum is sometimes the same as Curia (f): To be sure it could be no other than a Meeting-place for the Senate, the same as the Græcians called γερουσία. Sext. Pomp. Festus (g) tells us of three Senacula; two within the City Walls for ordinary Consultations; and one without the Limits of the City, where the Senate assembled to give Audience to those Ambassadors of Foreign States, whom they were unwilling to honour with an Admission into the City.

Lampridius (h) informs us, that the Emperor Heliogabulus built a Senaculum purposely for the Use of the Women, where, upon high Days, a Council of grave Matrons were to keep Court.

The Basilica were very spacious and beautiful Edifices, designed chiefly for the Centumviri, or the Judges, to sit in and hear Causes, and for the Counsellors to receive Clients. The Bankers too had one Part of it allotted for their Residence (i). Vossius (k) has observed that these Basilica were exactly in the Shape of our Churches, oblong almost like a Ship; which was the Reason that upon the Ruin of so many of them, Christian Churches were several Times raised on the old Foundations; and very often a whole Basilica converted to such a pious Use. And hence, perhaps, all our great Domes or Cathedrals are still called Basilica.

The Roman Forums were publick Buildings, about three Times as long as they were broad. All the Compass of the Forum was surrounded with arched Porticos, only some Passages being left for Places of Entrance. They generally contrived to have the most stately Edifices all round them, as Temples, Theatres, Basilica, &c. (l).

They were of two Sorts; Fora Civilia, and Fora Venalia: The first were designed for the Ornament of the City, and for the Use of publick Courts of Justice; the others were intended for no other End but the Necessities and Conveniencies of the Inhabitants, and were no Doubt equivalent to our Markets. I believe Lipsius, in the Description that has been given above, means only the former. Of these there were Five very considerable in Rome.

Forum Romanum, built by Romulus, and adorned with Porticos on all Sides by Tarquinius Priscus. It was called Forum Romanum, or simply Forum, by Way of Eminence, on Account of its Antiquity, and of the most frequent Use of it in publick Affairs. Martial (a) and Statius (b) for the same Reason give it the Name of Forum Latium; Ovid the same (c), and of Forum Magnum (d); and Herodian (e) calls it τὴν ἀρχαίαν ἀγορὰν, Forum Vetus.

Statius the Poet (f) has given an accurate Description of the Forum, in his Poem upon the Statue of Domitian on Horseback, set up there by that Emperor.

Forum Julium, built by Julius Cæsar, with the Spoils taken in the Gallick War. The very Area, Suetonius (g) tells us, cost 100,000 Sesterces; and Dio (h) affirms it to have much exceeded the Forum Romanum.

Forum Augusti, built by Augustus Cæsar, and reckoned by Pliny among the Wonders of the City. The most remarkable Curiosity was the Statues in the two Porticos, on each Side of the main Building. In one, were all the Latin Kings, beginning with Æneas; in the other, all the Kings of Rome, beginning with Romulus, and most of the eminent Persons in the Commonwealth, and Augustus himself among the rest; with an Inscription upon the Pedestal of every Statue, expressing the chief Actions and Exploits of the Person it represented (i).

This Forum, as Spartian (k) informs us, was restored by the Emperor Hadrian.

Forum Nervæ, begun by Domitian, as Suetonius (l) relates; but finished and named by the Emperor Nervæ. In this Forum, Alexander Severus set up the Statues of all the Emperors that had been canonized (m), in Imitation of the Contrivance of Augustus, mentioned but now. This Forum was called Transitorium, because it lay very convenient for a Passage to the other three; and Palladium, from the Statue of Minerva, the tutelar Deity of Augustus (a); upon which Account, perhaps, Fabrizius (b) attributes the Name of Palladium to the Forum of that Emperor.

There is scarce any Thing remaining of this Forum, except an old decayed Arch, which the People by a strange Corruption, instead of Nerva's Arch, call Noah's Ark (c).

But the most celebrated for the admirable Structure and Contrivance, was the Forum Trajani, built by the Emperor Trajan, with the foreign Spoils he had taken in the Wars. The Covering of this Edifice was all Brass, the Porticos exceedingly beautiful and magnificent, with Pillars of more than ordinary Height and Chapters of excessive Bigness (d).

Ammianus Marcellinus, in the Description of Constantine's triumphal Entrance into Rome, when he has brought him, with no ordinary Admiration, by the Baths, the Pantheon, the Capitol, and other noble Structures, as soon as ever he gives him a Sight of this Forum of Trajan, he puts him into an Ecstasy, and cannot forbear making an Harangue upon the Matter (e). We meet in the same Place with a very smart Repartee which Constantine received at this Time from Ormisdas, a Persian Prince. The Emperor, as he strangely admired every Thing belonging to this noble Pile, so he had a particular Fancy for the Statue of Trajan's Horse, which stood on the Top of the Building, and expressed his Desire of doing as much for his own Beast: Pray, Sir, says the Prince, before you talk of getting such a Horse, will you be pleased to build such a Stable to put him in (f).

The chief Fora Venalia, or Markets, were,

Bovarium, for Oxen and Beef.

Preperitius (g) has a pretty Fancy about this Forum, that it took its Name from Hercules's Oxen, which he brought from Spain, and rescued them here, after they had been stolen by Cacus.

Suavium, for Swine.

Pistorium, for Bread.

Copediuarium, for Dainties.

Heditorium, for Roots, Sallads, and such like.

The Comitium was only a Part of the Forum Romanum which served sometimes for the Celebration of the Comitia which will be described hereafter.

In this Part of the Forum stood the Rostræ, being a Suggestum, or Sort of Pulpit, adorned with the Beaks of Ships taken in a Sea-Fight from the Inhabitants of Antium in Italy, as Livy (a) informs us. In this the Causes were pleaded, the Orations made, and the Funeral Panegyrics spoke by Persons at the Death of their Relations; which pious Action they termed Defuncti pro rostris laudatio.

Hard by was fixed the Puteal, of which we have several and very different Accounts from the Criticks; but none more probable than the Opinion of the ingenious Monsieur Dacier (b), which he delivers to this Purpose:

“The Romans, whenever a Thunderbolt fell upon a Place without a Roof, took Care, out of Superstition, to have a Sort of Cover built over it, which they properly called Puteal. This had the Name of Puteal Libonis, and Scribonium Puteal, because Scribonius Libo erected it by Order of the Senate. The Prætor’s Tribunal standing just by, is often signified in Authors by the same Expression.”

C H A P. VI.

Of the Porticos, Arches, Columns, and Trophies.

IN Accounts of the eminent Buildings of the City, the PORTICOS have ever had an honourable Place. They were Structures of curious Work and extraordinary Beauty, annexed to public Edifices, Sacred and Civil, as well for Ornament as Use. They generally took their Names either from the Temples that they stood near, as Porticus Concordiæ, Quirini, Herculis, &c. or from the Authors, as Porticus Pompeia, Octavia, Livia, &c. or from the Nature and Form of the Building, as Porticus curva, stadiata, porphyretica; or from the Shops that were kept in them, as Margaritaria, and Argentaria; or from the remarkable Paintings in them, as Porticus Isidis, Europæ, &c. or else from the Places to which they joined, as Porticus Amphitheatrici, Porticus Circi, &c. (a).

These Porticos were sometimes put to very serious Uses, serving for the Assemblies of the Senate on several Accounts. Sometimes the Jewellers, and such as dealt in the most precious Wares, took up here their Standing to expose their Goods to Sale.

(a) Fabritii Roma, cap. 13.

But the general Use that they were put to, was the Pleasure of walking or riding in them; in the Shade in Summer, and in Winter in the dry; like the present Piazzas in Italy. Velleius Paterculus (a), when he deplores the extreme Corruption of Manners that had crept into Rome, upon the otherwise happy Conclusion of the Carthaginian War, mentions particularly the Vanity of the Noblemen, in endeavouring to outshine one another in the Magnificence of their Porticos, as a great Instance of their extravagant Luxury.

And Juvenal in his Seventh Satyr complains:

*Balnea sexcentis, & pluris Porticus, in quâ
Gestetur Dominus quoties pluit: anne serenum
Exspectet, spargatque luto jumenta recenti?
Hic potius; namque hic mundæ nitet ungula mulæ.*

On sumptuous Baths the Rich their Wealth bestow,
Or some expenlive airy Portico;
Where safe from Showers they may be borne in State;
And, free from Tempests, for fair Weather wait:
Or rather not expect the clearing Sun;
Through thick and thin their Equipage must run:
Or staying, 'tis not for their Servants Sake,
But that their Mules no Prejudice may take.

Mr. Charles Dryden.

Arches were publick Buildings, designed for the Reward and Encouragement of noble Enterprises, erected generally to the Honour of such eminent Persons as had either won a Victory of extraordinary Consequence Abroad, or had rescued the Commonwealth at Home from any considerable Danger. At first they were plain and rude Structures, by no Means remarkable for Beauty or State. But in latter Times no Expences were thought too great for the rendering them in the highest Manner splendid and magnificent: Nothing being more usual than to have the greatest Actions of the Heroes they stood to honour, curiously expressed, or the whole Procession of the Triumph cut out on the Sides. The Arches built by Romulus were only of Brick; that of Camillus, of plain square Stone; but then those of Cæsar, Drusus, Titus, Trajan, Constantian, &c. were all entirely Marble (b).

As to their Figure, they were at first Semicircular, whence probably they took their Names. Afterwards they were built

(a) Lib. 2. cap. 1.

(b) Fabii à Roma, cap. 14.

Four-square, with a spacious arched Gate in the Middle, and little ones on each Side. Upon the vaulted Part of the middle Gate, hung little winged Images, representing Victory, with Crowns in their Hands, which when they were let down, they put upon the Conqueror's Head, as he passed under in Triumph (a).

The COLUMNS or Pillars were none of the meanest Beauties of the City. They were at last converted to the same Design as the Arches, for the honourable Memorial of some noble Victory or Exploit, after they had been a long Time in Use for the chief Ornaments of the Sepulchres of great Men; as may be gathered from Homer, Iliad 16, where Juno, when she is foretelling the Death of Sarpedon, and speaking at last of carrying him into his own Country to be buried, has these Words;

Ἐνθαδὲ ταρχύουσσι κασίγνητοί τε, ἔται τε
Τύμβῃ τε γῆγῃ τε, τὸ γὰρ γέρας ἐστὶ θανάσιον.

There shall his Brothers and sad Friends receive
The breathless Corpse, and bear it to the Grave.
A Pillar shall be rear'd, a Tomb be laid,
The noblest Honour Earth can give the Dead.

The Pillars of the Emperors Trajan and Antoninus have been extremely admired for their Beauty and curious Work; and therefore deserve a particular Description.

The former was set up in the Middle of Trajan's Forum, being composed of 24 great Stones of Marble; but so curiously cemented, as to seem one entire natural Stone. The Height was 144 Feet, according to Eutropius (b); though Marlian (c) seems to make them but 128: Yet they are easily reconciled if we suppose one of them to have begun the Measure from the Pillar itself, and the other from the Basis. It is ascended on the Inside by 185 winding Stairs, and has 40 little Windows for the Admission of the Light. The whole Pillar is incrusted with Marble; in which are expressed all the noble Actions of the Emperor, and particularly the Decian War. One may see all over it the several Figures of Forts, Bulwarks, Bridges, Ships, &c. and all Manner of Arms, as Shields, Helmets, Targets, Swords, Spears, Daggers, Belts, &c. together with the several Offices and Employments of the Soldiers; some digging Trenches, some measuring out a Place for the Tents, and others making a triumphal Procession (a). But the noblest Ornament of this Pillar was the Statue of Trajan on the Top, of a gigantick Bigness; being no less than twenty Feet high. He was represented in a Coat of Armour proper to the General, holding in his Left-Hand a Sceptre, in his Right a hollow Globe of Gold, in which his own Ashes were deposited after his Death (b).

The Column of Antoninus was raised in Imitation of this, which it exceeded only in one Respect, that it was 176 Feet high (c): For the Work was much inferior to the former, as being undertaken in the declining Age of the Empire. The Ascent on the Inside was by 106 Stairs, and the Windows in the Sides 56. The Sculpture and the other Ornaments were of the same Nature as those of the first: And on the Top stood a Colussus of the Emperor naked, as appears from some of his Coins (d).

Both these Columns are still standing at Rome; the former most entire. But Pope Sixtus the First, instead of the two Statues of the Emperors, set up St. Peter's on the Column of Trajan, and St. Paul's on that of Antoninus (e).

Among the Columns we must not pass by the Milliarium aureum, a gilded Pillar in the Forum, erected by Augustus Cæsar, at which all the High-ways of Italy met, and were concluded (f). From this they counted their Miles, at the End of every Mile setting up a Stone; whence came the Phrase of Primus ab urbe Lapis, and that like. This Pillar, as Mr. Laffels informs us, is still to be seen.

Nor must we forget the Columna Bellica, thus described by Ovid:

*Prospicit à tergo summum brevis area Circum,
Est ibi non parvæ parva columna notæ:
Hinc solet hasta manu, belli prænuncia, mitti
In regem & gentem, cum placet arma capi (g).*

Behind the Circus on the level Ground,
Stands a small Pillar, for its Use renown'd:
Hence 'tis our Herald throws the fatal Spear,
Denotes the Quarrel, and begins the War.

But those who admire Antiquity, will think all these inferior to the Columna Rostrata, set up to the Honour of C. Duillius, when he had gained so famous a Victory over the Carthaginian and Sicilian Fleets, A. U. C. 493, and adorned with the Beaks of the Vessels taken in the Engagement. This is still to be seen in Rome, and never fails of a Visit from any curious Stranger. The Inscription on the Basis is a noble Example of the old Way of Writing, in the early Times of the Commonwealth. Besides this ancient and most celebrated one, there were several other Columnæ rostratæ erected on like Occasions; as particularly four by Augustus Cæsar after the Actium Defeat of Antony: To these Virgil alludes:

and

Addam & navali surgentes ære columnas (a).

The Design of the Trophies is too well known to need any Explication: The Shape of them cannot be better understood than by the following Description of the Poet:

*Ingentem quercum decisis undique ramis
Constituit tumulo, fulgentiæque induit arma.
Mœrenti ducis exuvias; tibi magne trophæum,
Bellipotens: Aptat rorantes sanguine scissas,
Telæque trunca viri, & his sex thoracæ petiitum
Persossūque locis: clypeumque ex ære sinistra
Subligat, atque ensē collo suspendit eburnum (b).*

And first he lopp'd an Oak's great Branches round;
The Trunk he fastened in a rising Ground:
And here he fix'd the shining Armour on,
The mighty Spoil from proud Mœrentius won:
Above the Crest was plac'd, that dropp'd with Blood,
A grateful Trophy to the warlike God;
His shattered Spears stuck round: The Corslet too,
Pierc'd in twelve Places, hung deform'd below:
While the Left-side his massy Target bears,
The Neck the glittering Blade he brandish'd in the Wars.

Of those Trophies which Marius rais'd after the Cimbric War, still remaining at Rome, we have this Account in Fabrizius: They are two Trunks of Marble hung round with Spoils: One of them is covered with a scaly Corslet, with Shields and other military Ornaments: Just before it, is set a young Man in the Posture of a Captive, with his Hands behind him, and all round were winged Images of Victory. The other is set out with the common military Garb, having a Shield of an unequal Round, and two Helmets, one open and adorned with Crests, the other close without Crests. On the same Trophy is the Shape of a Soldier's Coat, with several other Designs, which, by Reason of the Decay of the Marble, are very difficult to be discover'd (c).

Of the Bagnios, Aquæducts, Cloacæ, and Publick Ways.

THERE cannot be a greater Instance of the Magnificence, or rather Luxury of the Romans, than their noble Bagnios. Ammianus Marcellinus observes (a), that they were built in modum Provinciarum, as large as Provinces: But the great Valesius (b) judges the Word Provinciarum to be a Corruption of Piscinarum. And though this Emendation does in some Measure extenuate one Part of the Vanity, which has been so often alledged against them, from the Authority of that Passage of the Historian; yet the prodigious Accounts we have of their Ornaments and Furniture, will bring them, perhaps, under a Censure no more favourable than the former. Seneca, speaking of the Luxury of his Countrymen in this Respect, complains, That they were arrived to such a Pitch of Niceness and Delicacy, as to scorn to set their Feet on any Thing but precious Stones (c); and Pliny wishes good old Fabricius were but alive to see the Degeneracy of his Posterity, when the very Women must have their Seats in the Baths of solid Silver (d). But a Description from a Poet may, perhaps, be more diverting; and this Statius has obliged us with in his Poem upon the Baths of Claudius Etruscus, Steward to the Emperor Claudius:

*Nil ibi plebeium : nusquam Temesæa videbis
Æra, sed argento felix propellitur unda,
Argentoque cadit, labrisque nitentibus instat
Delicias mirata suas, & abire recusat.*

Nothing there's vulgar; not the fairest Brass
In all the glittering Structure claims a Place.
From Silver Pipes the happy Waters flow,
In Silver Cisterns are receiv'd below.

(c) Æp. 86.

See where with noble Pride the doubtful Stream
 Stands fix'd in Wonder on the shining Brim :
 Surveys its Riches, and admires its State ;
 Loth to be ravish'd from the glorious Seat.

The most remarkable Bagnios were those of the Emperors Dioclesian and Antonius Caracalla ; great Part of which are standing at this Time, and with the vast high Arches, the beautiful and stately Pillars, the extraordinary Plenty of foreign Marble, the curious Vaulting of the Roofs, the prodigious Number of spacious Apartments, and a Thousand other Ornaments and Conveniencies, are as pleasing a Sight to a Traveller, as any other Antiquities in Rome.

To these may be added the Nymphaeae, a Kind of Grottos sacred to the Nymphs, from whose Statues which adorned them, or from the Waters and Fountains which they afforded, their Name is evidently derived. A short Essay of the famous Lucus Holstenius, on the old Picture of a Nymphaeum dug up at the Foundation of the Palace of the Barbarini, is to be met with in the fourth Tome of Grævius's Thesaurus, p. 1800.

The Aquæducts were, without Question, some of the noblest Designs of the old Romans. Sextus Julius Frontinus, a Roman Author, and a Person of Consular Dignity, who has compiled a whole Treatise on this Subject, affirms them to be the clearest Token of the Grandeur of the Empire. The first Invention of them is attributed to Appius Claudius, A. U. C. 441. who brought Water into the City by a Channel of eleven Miles in Length. But this was very inconsiderable to those that were afterwards carried on by the Emperors and other Persons ; several of which were cut through the Mountains, and all other Impediments, for above forty Miles together ; and of such a Height, that a Man on Horseback, as Procopius informs us, might ride through them without the least Difficulty (a). But this is meant only of the constant Course of the Channel ; for the Vaults and Arches were in some Places 109 Feet high (b). Procopius (c) makes the Aquæducts but fourteen : Victor (d) has enlarged the Number to twenty ; In the Names of them the Waters only were mentioned ; as Aqua Claudia, Aqua Appia, &c.

(b) Sext. Tull. Frontin.

What should I sing how lofty Waters flow
 From airy Vaults, and leave the Rain below,
 While conquered Iris yields with her unequal Bow?
 Bold Typhon here had spar'd his Strength and Skill,
 And reach'd Jove's Walls from any single Hill.

But that which Pliny calls Opus omnium maximum were the Cloacæ, or common Gutters for the Conveyance of Dirt and Filth. And because no Authority can be better than his, we may venture to borrow the whole Account of them from the same Place, Cloacæ opus omnium maximum, &c.

‘ The Cloacæ; the greatest of all the Works, he contrived by ‘ undermining and cutting through the seven Hills upon which ‘ Rome is seated, making the City hang as it were, between ‘ Heaven and Earth, and capable of being failed under. M.
 ‘ Agrippa, in his Ædileship, made no less than seven Streams ‘ meet together under Ground in one main Channel, with such ‘ a rapid Current, as to carry all before them that they met
 ‘ with in their Passage. Sometimes, when they are violently ‘ swelled with immoderate Rains, they beat with excessive Fury ‘ against the Paving at the Bottom, and on the Sides. Some‘ times, in a Flood, the Tiber Waters oppose them in their ‘ Course; and then the two Streams encounter with all the ‘ Fury imaginable; and yet the Works preserve their old ‘ Strength, without any sensible Damage. Sometimes huge ‘ Pieces of Stone and Timber, or such-like Materials, are ‘ carried down the Channel, and yet the Fabrick receives no
 ‘ Detriment. Sometimes the Ruins of whole Buildings, destroyed
 ‘ by Fire or other Casualties, press heavily upon the Frame, ‘ Sometimes terrible Earthquakes shake the very Foundations,
 ‘ and yet they still continue impregnable almost 800 Years
 ‘ since they were first laid by Tarquinius (b).’

Very little inferior to the Works already mentioned were the publick Ways, built with extraordinary Charge to a great Distance from the City on all Sides. They were generally paved with Flint, though sometimes, and especially without the City, with Pebbles and Gravel. The most noble, in all Respects, was the Via Appia, taking its Name from the Author. Appius, the same that invented the Aqueducts, Vide. p. 57, 58. This was carried to such a vast Length, that Procopius (a) reckons it a very good five Days Journey to reach the End: And Lipsius (b) computes it at 350 Miles. An Account of as much of this Way as lies between Rome and Naples the Right Reverend the present Lord Bishop of Sarum has obliged us with in his Letters (c): He tells us it is twelve Feet broad; all made of huge Stones, most of them blue; and they are generally a Foot and a half large on all Sides. And presently after, admiring the extraordinary Strength of the Work, he says, that though it has lasted above 1800 Years, yet, in most Places it is, for several Miles (d) together, as entire as when it when it was made. And as to the Via Flaminia, the next Causeway of Note, the same Author observes, that though it be not indeed so entire as the former, yet there is enough left to raise a just Idea of the Roman Greatness.

I must desire Leave to conclude this Subject with the ingenious Epigram of Janus Vitalis, an Italian Poet:

*Quid Romam in media quæris novus advena Roma,
Et Romæ in Roma nil reperis media?
Aspice murorum moles, præruptaque saxa,
Obruptaque horrenti vasta-Theatra situ:
Hæc sunt Roma: Viden' velut ipsa cadavera tantæ
Urbis adhuc spirent imperiosa minas?
Vicit ut hæc mundum, nisi est se vincere: vicit
A se non victum ne quid in orbe foret.
Hinc victa in Roma victrix Roma illa sepulta est,
Atque eadem victrix victaque Roma fuit.
Albula Romani restat nunc nominis index,
Qui quoque nunc rapidis fertur in æquor aquis.
Disce hinc quod possit fortuna; immota labascunt,
Et quæ perpetuo sunt agitata, manent.*

To seek for Rome, vain Stranger art thou come,
And find'st no Mark, within Rome's Walls, of Rome?
See here the craggy Walls, the Towers defac'd,
And Piles that frighten more than once they pleas'd:
See the vast Theatres, a shapeless Load,
And Sights more tragick than they ever show'd,

(a) Dē Bell. Goth. lib. 1. (b) De Magn. Rom. (c) Letter 4th. (d) Ibid.

This, this is Rome: Her haughty Carcase spread
Still awes in Ruin, and commands when dead.
The subject World first took from her their Fate;
And when she only stood unconquer'd yet,
Herseif she last subdued, to make the Work complete. }
But ah! so dear the fatal Triumph cost,
That conquering Rome is in the conquer'd lost,
Yet rolling Tiber still maintains his Sream, Swell'd with the Glories of the Roman Name.
Strange Power of Fate! unshaken Moles must waste;
While Things that ever move, for ever last.

PART II. BOOK II.

Of the RELIGION of the Romans.

CHAP. I.

Of the Religion and Morality of the ROMANS in General.

HAT RELIGION is absolutely necessary for the Establishing of Civil Government, is a Truth so far from being denied by any Sort of Persons, that we meet with too many who are unwilling to allow any other Design in Sacred Institutions. As to the Romans, it has been universally agreed, That Virtue and Fortune were engaged in a Sort of noble Contention for the Advancement of the Grandeur and Happiness of that People. And a Judge, not suspected of Partiality in that Case, has concluded the latter to be only a Consequence of the former: For Religion, says he (a) produced good Laws, good Laws good Fortune, and good Fortune a good End in whatever they undertook. Nor, perhaps, has he strained the Panegyrick much too high, when he tells us, That for several Ages together, never was the Fear of God more eminently conspicuous than in that Republick (b). It was this Consideration which made the great St. Austin observe (c), That God would not give Heaven to the Romans, because they were Heathens; but he gave them the Empire of the World, because they were Virtuous. And, indeed, in their more general Virtues, their Practice inclined rather to the Excess than the Defect: Thus they were devout to Superstition; valiant to a Contempt of a Life, and an inconsiderate Courting of Danger: Frugal and temperate in the first Ages, to a voluntary Abstinence from agreeable Pleasures and Conveniencies; constant, several Times, to the Occasion of their own Ruin, and rather rigorous than just. A tedious Account of the Decii, Regulus, Fabricius, Curius, Scævola, &c. would be needless even to a School-Boy, who is seldom unfurnished with a Stock of such Histories.

(a) Maeland's Discourse on Laws, lib. 2. cap. 12. (b) Ibid. (c) Civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 5.

But we must by no Means omit a most noble Saying of Cicero, to this Purpose, in his Oration about the Answer of the Aruspices: Quam volumus licet, Patres Conscripti, nos amemus: tamen nec numero Hispanos, nec robore Gallos, nec calliditate Pannos, nec artibus Græcos; nec denique hoc ipso hujus Gentis & Terre domestico nativoque sensu Italos ipsos & Latinos, sed Pietate & Religione, atque hac una sapientia quod Deorum immortalium Numine omnia regi gubernarique perspeximus, omnes Gentis Nationesque superavimus.

But it will naturally be objected, that whatever Harangues we make upon the Justice, Temperance, and other celebrated Virtues of the old Romans, they at last degenerated into the most luxurious and extravagant People in the World. Every Page of their own Satirists is a very good Argument for this Opinion; besides the numerous Complaints of their Historians and other Writers. Now though Lipsius has undertaken to bring them off clear from all such Imputations; yet, I think, we must be forced to allow, that they did indeed debase the noble and generous Spirit of their Ancestors; and this Corruption was, without Doubt, the only Cause of the Declension and final Ruin of the Empire. But as we are not to give over the Cause of Virtue, on Account of the Debauchery of latter Times, so we have little Reason to exalt the eminent Qualities of the old Romans to so high a Pitch as some imagine. There is no Necessity of making a Hero of every Consul, or fancying every one, who was eminently servicable to the Republick, to have been a Person of consummate Virtue. So that when we meet in Roman Authors with such extravagant Encomiums of their Ancestors, we may conclude, that what Horace had observed with Reference to Poetry, will hold altogether as well in this Case: The Generality of People being so strangely transported with the Love and Admiration of Antiquity, that nothing was more usual than to meet with such a Person as he describes,

Qui redit ad Fastos et virtutem æstimat annis, Miraturque nihil nisi quod Libitina sacravit.

That when he tried a Man's Pretence to Fame,
Runs to his Chronicle to find his Name ;
Thinks Virtue better for its Age, like Wine ;
And only likes what Death has made Divine.

For we may often observe, that their very Panegyricks upon the honest People of the first Ages of the Commonwealth represent them rather as a Sort of rude, unpolished Mortals, than as Persons eminent for any noble Endowments. So Juvenal, Sat. 14 :

————— *Saturabat glebula talis
Patrem ipsum turbamque casæ ; quâ sæta jacebat
Uxor & infantes ludebant quatuor, unus
Vernula, tres domini : sed magnis fratribus horum
A serobe vel sulco redeuntibus altera cœna
Amplior, & grandes fumabant pultibus ollæ.*

————— This little Spot of Earth, well till'd
A numerous Family with Plenty fill'd.
The good old Man and thrifty Housewife spent
Their Days in Peace, and fatten'd with Content !
Enjoy'd the Dregs of Life, and liv'd to see
A long, descending, healthful Progeny.
The Men were fashion'd in a larger Mould :
The Women fit for Labour, Big and Bold.
Gigantick Hinds, as soon as Work was done,
To their huge Pots of boiling Pulse would run,
Fell to, with eager Joy, on homely Food,
And their large Veins beat strong with wholesome Blood.
Mr. John Dryden, Jun.

But the Account which Perseus gives us of Titus Quintius, the old Country Dictator, has something more of the Ridiculous in it :

*Unde Remus, sulcoque terens dentalia, Quinti,
Quem trepida ante boves Dictatorem induit uxor,
Et tua Aratra domum Liætor tulit (a).——*

Where Romulus was bred, and Quintius born,
 Whose shining Plough-share was in Furrows worn,
 Met by his trembling Wife returning Home,
 And rustically joy'd as Chief of Rome.
 She wip'd the Sweat from the Dictator's Brow ;
 And o'er his Back his Robe did rudely throw ;
 The Lictors bore in State the Lord's triumphant Plough. }
 Mr. Dryden.

We must therefore allow every Age its proper Character and Commendation; and conclude with the ingenious Monsieur St. Evremont, That the excellent Citizens lived among the ancient Romans, and the most accomplished Generals among the latter (a).

C H A P. II.

Of the Luperci, Lupercalia, &c. Of the Potitili and Pinarii, and of the Arval Brothers.

THE Places of Worship having been already described, the chief Subjects that still remain, relating to Religion, are the Priests, the sacrifices, and the Festivals: For it would be very needless and impertinent to enter into a Disquisition about the Deities; a Matter that is involved in so many endless Fictions, and yet has employed so many Pens to explain it.

Luperci.] The most ancient Order of the Priests were the Luperci, sacred to Pan the God of the Country, and particularly of Shepherds. They had their Name from the Deity they attended on, called in Greek ἄλκιος, probably from ἄλκος, a Wolf, in Latin, Lupus; because the chief Employment of Pan, was the Driving away such Beasts from the Sheep that he Lupercalia protected. The Lupercalia, as Plutarch observes, appear to have been a Feast of Purification, being solemnized on the Dies Nefasti, or Non-Court-Days of the Month February, which derives its Name from februus to purify:

And

And the very Day of the Celebration was anciently called Februa (a).

The Ceremony was very singular and strange.

In the first Place, there was a Sacrifice killed of Goats and a Dog. Then two Children, Noblemens Sons, being brought thither, some of the Luperci stained their Foreheads with the bloody Knife, while others wiped it off with Locks of Wool dipped in Milk; the Boys must always laugh after their Foreheads had been wiped: This done, having cut the Goat-skins into Thongs, they ran about the Streets all naked but their Middle, and lashed all that they met in their Procession. The young Women never took any Care to avoid the Strokes, but rather offered themselves of their own Accord, fancying them to be great Helpers of Conception and Delivery (b). They ran naked, because Pan is always painted so. They sacrificed a Goat, because the same Deity was supposed to have Goat's Feet; which gave Occasion to his common Epithet of Capripes. As for the Dog we meet with in the Sacrifice, it was added as a necessary Companion of a Shepherd, and because of the natural Antipathy between them and Wolves.

Some have fancied with Plutarch, that these Lupercalia were instituted in Honour of the Wolf that preserved Romulus and Remus. Others carry their Original much higher, and tell us, that they were brought into Italy by Evander, before the Time of Aeneas.

There were two Companies of the Luperci, the Fabiani and Quintiliani; one for Romulus, the other for Remus: They took their Names from Fabius and Quintilius, two of their Masters or Chief Priests (c). Dion Cassius tells us, that a third Sort of Priests, designed for the Celebration of the Lupercalia, were instituted by the Senate to the Honour of Julius Caesar (d).

Suetonius (e) reckons the Lupercalia among the ancient Rites and Ceremonies restored by Augustus: And Onuph. Panvinius assures us they continued in Rome till the Time of the Emperor Anastasius.

2. Potitii and Pinarii.] The Potitii and Pinarii were of equal Antiquity with the former. They owe their Institution to the same Author, upon the following Account:

After the Killing of Cacus, a Giant that had stole some of Hercules's Cattle, the Booty that he brought through Italy, from Spain; the Shepherds and ignorant People of the Country, gathering in great Flocks about the Stranger, at last brought him before Evander. The King, after Examination, finding him to be in all Respects the same Person that his Mother the Prophetess Carmenta had told him should come into Italy, and be afterward a God, immediately erected an Altar to his Honour, and offered for a Sacrifice a young Bullock that never bore the Yoke; ordaining, that the same Ceremony should be repeated in a solemn Manner every Year. The Performance of these Rites he committed to the Care of the Potitii and Pinarii, two of the noblest Families and of best Repute in those Parts. There goes a Story, that the Pinarii happening to come too late to the Sacrifice, so as to lose their Share in the Entrails, they were, by Way of Punishment debarred from ever tasting them for the future: And hence some derive their Name from πίνα Hunger. But this I take to be but a trifling Fancy; for we may as well derive Potitii from potiri, because they enjoyed the Entrails, as Pinarii from πινα because they wanted them.

We meet with something very remarkable of the Potitii in Livy (a), and Valerius Maximus (b).

That when, upon Application made to Appius Claudius the Censor, they got Leave to have their hereditary Ministry discharged by Servants, in the Compass of one Year the whole Family was entirely extinct, though no less than thirty of them were lusty young Men. And Appius Claudius lost his Eyes, as a Judgement for his Part in the Offence.

Acca Laurentia, Romulus's Nurse, had a Custom once a Year to make a solemn Sacrifice for a Blessing upon the Fields: Her twelve Sons assisting her always in the Solemnity. At last she had the ill Fortune to lose one of her Sons; when Romulus, to show his Gratitude and Respect, offered himself to fill up the Number in his Room, and gave the Company the Name of Fratres Arvales. This Order was in great Repute at Rome; they held the Dignity always for their Lives, and never lost it upon Account of Imprisonment, Banishment, or any other Accident (c). They wore on their Heads, at the Time of their Solemnity, Crowns made of Ears of Corn, upon a Tradition that Laurentia at first presented Romulus with such an one (d). Some will have it that it was their Business to take Care of the Boundaries, and the Divisions of Land, and to decide all Controversies that might happen about them: The Processions, or Perambulations made under their Guidance, being termed Ambarvalia: Others make a different Order instituted for that Purpose, and called Sodales Arvales, on the same Account as the Fratres Arvales.

C H A P. III.

Of the Augurs, Auguries, &c.

THE Invention of Soothfaying is generally attributed to the Chaldeans; from them the Art passed to the Græcians; the Græcians delivered it to the Tuscans, and they to the Latins, and the Romans. The Name of Augurs is derived by some ab Avium gestu; by others, ab Avium garritu: Either from the Motion and Actions, or from the Chirping and Chattering of Birds. Romulus was himself an extraordinary Proficient in this Art (a), and therefore as he divided the City into three Tribes, so he constituted three Augurs, one for every Tribe. There was a fourth added some Time after, probably by Servius Tullius, who increased the Tribes to that Number. These four being all chosen out of the Patricii, or Nobility, in the Year of the City 454, the Tribunes of the People, with much Difficulty, procured an Order, that five Persons, to be elected out of the Commons, should be added to the College (b). Afterwards Sylla the Dictator, A. U. C. 671, made the Number up Fifteen (c). The eldest of these had the Command of the Rest, and was honoured with the Title of Magister Collegii (d).

Their Business was to interpret Dreams, Oracles, Prodigies, &c. and to tell whether any Action should be fortunate or prejudicial to any particular Persons, or to the whole Commonwealth. Upon this Account, they very often occasioned the Displacing of Magistrates, the Deferring of publick Assemblies, &c. whenever the Omens proved unlucky.

Before we proceed to the several Kinds of Auguries, it may not be improper to give an Account of the two chief Terms by which they are distinguished in Authors, dextra and sinistra. These being differently applied by the Greeks and Latins, and very often by the Latins themselves (who sometimes speak agreeable to the Græcian Customs, sometimes according to their own) have given Occasion to many Mistakes, which may be all cleared up by this easy Observation: That the Greeks and Romans both deriving the Happiness of their Omens from the Eastern Quarter, the former turned towards the North, and so had the East on the Right Hand; the latter towards the South,

(a) Plutarch, in Romul. (b) Liv, lib. 10. (c) Florus Epitom. Liv. lib. 89.
(d) Id x. ab Alex. lib. 5. cap. 19.

There are five Sorts of Auguries mentioned in Authors.

1. From the Appearances in Heaven; as Thunder, Lightning, Comets, and other Meteors. As suppose of Thunder, whether it came from the Right or the Left: Whether the Number of Strokes were even or odd, &c. Only the Master of the College could take this Sort of Augury (a).

2. From Birds; whence they had the Names of Auspices of avis and specis. Some Birds furnished them with Observations from their chattering and singing, others from their flying. The former they called Osines, the latter Præpetes. Of the first Sort were Crows, Pies, Owls, &c. of the other, Eagles, Vultures, Buzzards, and the like.

For the taking of both these Sorts of Auguries, the Observer stood upon a Tower with his Head covered in a Gown peculiar to his Office, called Lana, and turning his Face towards the East, marked out the Heavens into four Templa or Quarters, with his Lituus, a short straight Rod, only a little turning at one End: This done, he staid waiting for the Omen; which never signified any thing, unless confirmed by another of the same Sort.

3. From Chickens kept in a Coop or Pen for this Purpose. The Manner of divining from them was as follows: Betimes in the Morning the Augur that was to make the Observation, called from hence Pullarius (tho' perhaps the Keeper of the Chickens had rather that Name) in the first Place commanding a general Silence, ordered the Pen to be opened, and threw down a Handful of Crumbs or Corn. If the Chickens did not immediately run fluttering to the Meat; if they scattered it with their Wings; if they went by without taking Notice of it, or if they flew away, the Omen was reckoned unfortunate, and to portend nothing but Danger or Mischance: But if they leaped presently out of the Pen, and fell too so greedily, as to let some of their Meat drop out of their Mouths upon the Pavement, there was all the Assurance in the World of Happiness and Success (b). This Augury was called Tripudium, quasi Terripaviam, from striking the Earth: The old Word pavire signifying as much as ferire. We meet with Tripudium, Solistimum, and Tripudium Sonivium in Festus, both derived from the Crumbs falling to the Ground.

4. From Beasts. These, as Rossius reckons them up, were Wolves, Foxes, Goats, Heifers, Asses, Rams, Hares, Weasels, and Mice. The general Observations about them were, whether they appeared in a strange Place, or crossed the Way; or whether they ran to the Right or the Left, &c. 5. The

(b) Idem, lib. 9. cap. 29.

5. The last Sort of Divination was from what they called Diræ, or unusual Accidents to any Person or Place; as Sneezing, Stumbling, seeing Apparitions, hearing strange Voices, the falling of Salt upon the Table, the spilling of Wine upon one's Clothes, the meeting a Wolf, a Fox, a Hare, a Bitch with Whelp, &c.

We may observe, that though any Augur might take an Observation; yet the Judging of the Omen was left to the Decision of the whole College (a).

Cicero has sufficiently exposed these Auguries, especially that about the Chickens, in his second Book of Divination.

The learned Mr. O. W. has taken Notice, that the Emperors assumed the Office of Augurs, as well as of Pontiffs, as appears from several Coins of Julius, Augustus, Vespasian, Verus, &c. which have the Augurs Ensigns upon them.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Aruspices and Pontifices.

THE Aruspices had this Name ab aris aspiciendis, from looking upon the Altars; as, ab extis inspiciendis, they were called Extispices: They owe their Original to Romulus, who borrowed the Institution from the Tuscans. The Tuscans received it, as the general Tradition goes, from a Boy that they strangely ploughed up out of the Ground, who obliged them with a Discovery of all the Mysteries belonging to this Art (b). At first only the Natives of Tuscany exercised this Office at Rome; and therefore the Senate made an Order, that twelve of the Sons of the principal Nobility should be sent into that Country to be instructed in the Rites and Ceremonies of their Religion, of which this Secret was a chief Part (c). The Business of the Aruspices was to look upon the Beasts offered in Sacrifice, and by them to divine the Success of any Enterprize. They took their Observations from four Appearances:

1. From the Beasts before they were cut up.
2. From the Entrails of those Beasts after they were cut up.
3. From the Flame that used to rise when they were burning.
4. From the Flour of Bran, from the Frankincense, Wine, and Water that they used in the Sacrifice.

In the Beast, before they were cut up, they took Notice, whether they were forcibly dragged to the Altar; whether they got loose out of the Leaders Hands ; whether they escaped the Stroke or bounded up, and roared very loud when they received it ; whether they died with a great deal of Difficulty, all which, with several other Omens, were counted unfortunate : Or whether on the other Side, they followed the Leader without Compulsion ; received the Blow without struggling and Resistance ; whether they led easily, and sent out a great Quantity of Blood, which gave equal Assurance of a prosperous Event.

In the Beast, when cut up, they observed the Colour of the Parts, and whether any were wanting. A double Liver was counted highly unfortunate : A little or a lean Heart was always unlucky : If the Heart was wholly missing, nothing could be thought more fatal and dreadful ; as it happened in two Oxen together, offered by Julius Cæsar, a little before his Murther ; if the Entrails fell out of the Priest's Hands ; if they were besmeared more than ordinarily with Blood ; if they were of a pale livid Colour, they portended sudden Danger and Ruin.

As to the Flame of the Sacrifice, it furnished them with a good Omen, if it gathered up violently, and presently consumed the Sacrifice : If it was clear, pure, and transparent, without any Mixture of Smoke, and not discoloured with red, pale, or black ; if it was quiet and calm, not sparkling or crackling, but ran up directly in the Shape of a Pyramid. On the contrary, it always portended Misfortune, if at first it required much Pains to light it ; if it did not burn upright, but rolled into Circles, and left void Spaces between them ; if it did not presently catch hold on the whole Sacrifice, but crept up by Degrees, from one Part to another ; if it happened to be spread about by the Wind, or to be put out by sudden Rain, or to leave any Part unconsumed.

In the Meal, Frankincense, Wine and Water, they were to observe, whether they had their due Quantity, their proper Taste, Colour and Smell. &c.

There were several lesser Signs which supplied them with Conjectures, too insignificant to be here mentioned.

Most of those ill Omens are hinted at by Virgil, Geor. 3. v. 486.

*Sæpe in honore Deum melio stans hostia ad aram,
Lan. a dum nivæ circumdatur insulâ vittâ,
Inter cunctantes cecidit moribunda ministros.
Aut si quam ferro mactaverat ante Sacerdos,
Inde neque impostitis ardent altaria sibiis,
Nec responsa potest consultus reddere vates :
Ac vix suppositi timoribus sanguine cuitri,
Summaque jejuna sanie injicitur arena.*

The Victim Ox that was for Altars press'd
 Trim'd with White Ribbons, and with Garlands dress'd, Sunk of himself without the Gods Command,
 Preventing the slow Sacrificer's Hand:
 Or, by the wolv Butcher if he fell,
 The inspect'd Entrails could no Fate foretell:
 Nor, laid on Altars, did pure Flames arise,
 But Clouds of smouldring Smoke forbade the Sacrifice.
 Scarfely the Knife was redd'n'd with his Gore.
 Or the black Poison stain'd the sandy Floor.

Mr. Dryden.

Yet the Business of the Aruspices was not restrained to the Altars and Sacrifices, but they had an equal Right to the explaining all other Portents and Monsters. Hence we find them often consulted by the Senate on extraordinary Occasions: Or if the Roman Aruspices lay under a Disrepute, others were sent for out of Tuscany, where this Craft most flourished, as it was first invented.

The College of Aruspices, as well as those of the other religious Orders, had their particular Registers and Records, such as the Memorials of Thunders and Lightenings, the Tuscan Histories, and the like.

There are but two Accounts of the Derivation of the Name of the Pontifices, and both very uncertain; either from Pons, and facere; because they first built the Sublician Bridge in Rome, and had the Care of its Repair; or from Possè and facere, where facere must be interpreted to signify the same as Offerre, and Sacrificare. The first of these is the most received Opinion; and yet Plutarch himself hath called it absurd (a). At the first Institution of them by Numa, the Number was confined to four, who were constantly chosen out of the Nobility, 'till the Year of the City 454, when five more were ordered to be added of the Commons, at the same Time that the Augurs received the like Addition. And as the Augurs had a College, so the Pontifices too were settled in such a Body. And as Sylla afterwards added seven Augurs, so he added as many Pontifices to the College: The first eight bearing the Name of Pontifices majores, and the rest of minores.

The Offices of the Pontifices, were to give Judgment in all Causes relating to Religion; to enquire into the Lives and Manners of the inferior Priests, and to punish them if they saw Occasion; to prescribe Rules for publick Worship; to regulate the

(a) In Numa.

Feasts, Sacrifices, and all other sacred Institutions. Tully, in his Oration to them for his House, tells them, that the Honour and Safety of the Commonwealth, the Liberty of the People, the Houses and Fortunes of the Citizens, and the very Gods themselves, were all entrusted to their Care, and depended wholly on their Wisdom and Management.

The Master or Superintendant of the Pontifices was one of the most honourable Offices in the Commonwealth. Numa, when he instituted the Order, invested himself first with this Dignity, as Plutarch informs us; though Livy attributes it to another Person of the same Name. Festus's Definition of this great Priest is, Judex atque Arbitrator Rerum Humanarum Divinarumque, the Judge and Arbitrator of Divine and Human Affairs. Upon this Account all the Emperors, after the Examples of Julius Cæsar and Augustus, either actually took upon them the Office, or at least used the Name. And even the Christian Emperors, for some Time, retained this in the ordinary Enumeration of their Titles, 'till the Time of Gratian, who (as we learn from (a) Zosimus) absolutely refused it.

Polydore Virgil (b) does not Question but this was an infallible Omen of the Authority which the Bishop of Rome enjoys to this Day, under the Name of Pontifex maximus.

C H A P. V.

Of the Flamines, Rex Sacrorum, Salii, Feciales, and Sodales.

THE Name of Flamines is not much clearer than the former. Plutarch makes it a Corruption of Pilamines from Pileus, a Sort of Cap proper to the Order. Varro, Festus and Servius will have it to be a Contraction of Filamines from Filum; and all us, that finding their Caps too heavy and troublesome, they took up a lighter Fashion, only binding a Parcel of Thread about their Heads. Others derive the Word from Flamina or Flameum, a Sort of Turban which they make them to have worn; though this generally signifies a Woman's Veil. Rosinus and Mr. Dodwell declare for the Second of these Opinions; Polydore Virgil has given his Judgment in Favour of the third (a).

(a) De invent. rer. lib. 4. cap. 14.

Numa

Numa at first discharged several Offices of Religion himself, and designed that all his Successors should do the like: But because he thought the greatest Part of them would partake more of Romulus's Genius than his own, and that their being engaged in warlike Enterprizes might incapacitate them for this Function, he instituted these Flamines to take Care of the same Services, which by Right belonged to the Kings (a).

The only three constituted at first were Flamen Dialis, Martialis, and Quirinalis. The first was sacred to Jupiter; and a Person of the highest Authority in the Commonwealth. He was obliged to observe several superstitious Restraints, as well as honoured with several eminent Privileges beyond other Officers; which are reckoned up at large by Gellius (b). The same Author tells us, that the Wife of this Flamen had the Name of Flaminica, and was entrusted with the Care of several Ceremonies peculiar to her Place.

But, to be sure, the Greatness of the Dignity was sufficiently diminished in succeeding Times; otherwise we cannot imagine that Julius Cæsar should have been invested with it at seventeen Years of Age, as Suetonius (c) informs us he was: Or that Sylla should have so easily driven him from his Office, and from his House.

The other two were of less, yet of very eminent Authority; ordained to inspect the Rites of Mars and Romulus. All three were chosen out of the Nobility. Several Priests of the same Order, though of inferior Power and Dignity, were added in later Times; the whole Number being generally computed at fifteen. Yet Festus (or the Author under his Name) assures us from Varro, that the old Romans had a particular Flamen for every Deity they worshipped (d).

Though the Flamen Dialis discharged several Religious Duties that properly belonged to the Kings, yet we meet with another Officer of greater Authority, who seems to have been purely designed for that Employment: And this was the Rex Sacrorum, or Sacrorum. Dionysius gives us the Original of this Institution as follows: Because the Kings had in a great many Respects been very serviceable to the State, the Establishers of the Commonwealth thought it very proper to keep always the Name of King in the City. Upon this Account they ordered the Augurs and Pontifices to chuse out a fit Person, who should engage never to have the least Hand in Civil Affairs, but devote himself wholly to the Care of the Public Worship and Ceremonies of Religion, with the Title of Rex Sacrorum (e).

And Livy informs us, that the Office of Rex Sacrorum was therefore made inferior to that of Pontifex Maximus, for Fear that the Name of King, which had been formerly so odious to the People, might, for all this Restraint, be still, in some Measure, prejudicial to their Liberty (a).

Salii.] The Original of Salii may be thus gathered from Plutarch. In the eighth Year of Numa's Reign a terrible Pestilence, spreading itself over Italy, among other Places, miserably infested Rome. The Citizens were almost grown desperate, when they were comforted on a sudden by the Report of a Brazen Target, which (they say) fell into Numa's Hands from Heaven. The King was assured by the Conference he maintained with the Nymph Egeria and the Muses, that the Target was sent from the Gods for the Cure and Safety of the City; and this was soon verified by the miraculous Ceasing of the Sickness. They advised him too to make eleven other Targets, so like in their Dimensions and Form to the Original, that, in Case there should be a Design of stealing it away, the true might not be distinguished or known from those which were counterfeited; by which Means it would be more difficult to defeat the Counsels of Fate, in which it had been determined, that, while this was preserved, the City should prove happy and victorious. This difficult Work one Veturius Mamurius very luckily performed, and made eleven others that Numa himself could not know from the first. They were worked into an oval Form, with several Folds or Plaits closing one over another. They exactly fitted the Elbow by their Figure; and were thence called Ancylia, from Ἀγκύλη, which signifies a crooked Javelin; or from the Cubit (Alkew) that Part of the Arm between the Wrist and the Elbow, upon which they carried the Ancylia (b): For the keeping of these, Numa instituted an Order of Priests, called Salii, à saliendo, from leaping or dancing. They lived all in a Body, and composed a College consisting of the same Number of Men with the Bucklers which they preserved. The three Seniors governed the rest; of whom the first had the Name of Præsul, the second of Vates, and the other of Magister (c). In the Month of March was their great Feast, when they carried their sacred Charge about the City. At this Procession they were habited in a short scarlet Cassock, having round them a broad Belt clasped with brass Buckles. On their Head they wore a Sort of Copper Helmet. In this Manner they went on with a nimble Motion, keeping just Measures with their Feet and demonstrating great Strength and Agility by the various and handsome Turns of their Body (a). They sung all along a Set of old Verses called the Carmen Saliare; the original Form of which was composed by Numa. They were sacred to Mars (the Ancylia or Targets being Parts of Armour) who from them took the Name of Salisubfulus. And therefore, upon Account of the extraordinary Noise and Shaking that they made in their Dances, Catullus, to signify a strong Bridge, has used the Phrase.

In quo vel Salisubfuli Sacra fiunt. (b).

Unless the Conjecture of Vossius be true, that Salisubfulus is here a Corruption from Salii ipsulus: The Performers in those Dances bearing with them, among other superstitious Trifles, a Sort of thin Plates worked into the Shapes of Men and Women, which they called ipsules or subfiles, and ipsulæ or subsulæ. Upon admitting this Opinion, Mars must lose his Name of Salisubfulus; and Pacuvius cannot relieve him; because the Verse with this Word in it, commonly cited from that old Poet, is thought (by Vossius at least) to be a mere Fiction of Muretus's, who was noted for this Kind of Forgery. See Voss. in Catull. p. 46.

Though the Month of March (dedicated to that God) was the proper Time for carrying about the Ancylia; yet if at any Time a just and lawful War had been proclaimed by Order of the Senate, against any State or People, the Salii were in a solemn Manner to move the Ancylia; as if by that Means they roused Mars from his Seat, and sent him out to the Assistance of their Arms (c).

Tullius Hostilius afterwards increased the College with twelve more Salii, in pursuance of a Vow he made in the Battle with the Sabines. And therefore, for Distinction Sake, the twelve first were generally called Salii Palatini, from the Palatine Mountain, whence they began their Procession; the other Salii, Collini, or Agonenses, from the Quirinal Hill, sometimes called Mons Agonalis; where they had a Chapel, on one of the highest Eminences of the Mountain (d).

Alexander ab Alexandro has observed that the Entertainments of these Priests, upon their solemn Festivals, were exceeding costly and magnificent, with all the Variety of Music, Garlands, Perfumes, &c. (e): And therefore Horace uses dapes Saliaræ (f) for delicate Meats, as he does Pontificum cœnæ (g) for great Regalios.

Feciales.] The Feciales Varro derives from Fides, because they had the Care of the Publick Faith in Leagues and Contracts, Others bring the Word à facere faciendo on the same Account. Their Original in Italy was very ancient. Dionysius Halicarn. finds them among the Aborigines, under the Name of σπονδοφόροι, libaminum latores: And Virgil intimates as much in several Places. Numa first instituted the Order at Rome (a), consisting of twenty Persons (b), chosen out of the most eminent Families in the City, and settled in a College. It is probable he ranked them among the Officers of Religion, to procure them the more Deference and Authority, and to make their Persons more sacred in the Commonwealth.

Their Office was to be the Arbitrators of all Controversies relating to War and Peace; nor was it lawful on any Account to take up Arms, 'till they had declared all Means and Expedients that might tend to an Accommodation to be insufficient. In case the Republick had suffered any Injury from a Foreign State, they dispatched these Feciales, who were properly Heralds, to demand Satisfaction; who if they could procure no Restitution or just Return, calling the Gods to witness against the People and Country, immediately denounced War; otherwise they confirmed the Alliance that had been formerly made, or contracted a new one (c). But the Ceremonies used upon both these Occasions will fall more properly under another Head. It is enough to observe here, that both the Affairs were managed by these Officers, with the Consent of the Senate and People.

As to the Pater Patratus,² it is not easy to determine whether he was a constant Officer, and the Chief of the Feciales, or whether he was not a temporary Master, elected upon Account of making a Peace or denouncing War, which were both done by him. Rosinus makes him the constant Governor, or Master of the Feciales (d). Enestella (or the Author under his Name) a distinct Officer altogether (e). Pomponius Latius (f) and Polydore Virgil (g) tells us, that he was only chosen by one of the Feciales, out of their own Body, upon such Occasions as we mentioned but now. The latter Opinion may be defended by the Authority of Livy, who, in order to the Treaty with the Albans before the triple Combat of the Horatii and Curiatii, makes one of the Feciales chuse a Pater Patratus to perform that Ceremony (h). The Person to be entrusted with this Office must have been one, who had a Father and a Son both alive; and therefore Pater Patratus is no more than a more perfect Sort of Father; as they imagined him to be, whose own Father was still living after he himself had been a Father for some Time. Perhaps too they might fancy him to be the fittest Judge in Affairs of such Consequence, who could see as well behind, as before him (a).

Though the Members of any Collegiate Body, and particularly the free Tradesmen of the several Companies, are often called Sodales; yet those who challenged that Name by Way of Eminence, were religious Officers, instituted to take Care of the Festivals and Annual Honours of great Persons deceased. The first of this Order were the Sodales Tatii, created to supervise the Solemnities in Memory of Tatius the Sabine King. Tiberius founded a College of the same Nature, and gave the Members the Title of Sodales Augustales; their Business was to inspect the Rites paid to Augustus Caesar after his Death; and to perform the same good Offices to the whole Julian Family, as the old Sodales Tatii preserved the sacred Memorials of all the Sabine Race.

Afterwards we meet with the Sodales Antoniniani, Helviani, Alexandrini, &c. instituted on the like Accounts, but so restrained to the Service of the particular Emperors, that the Antoniniani, for Example, were divided into the Pii, Lucii, Marci, &c. according to the proper Name of the Prince on whose Honours they were to attend. *Vid. Of the VESTALS.

THE Institution of the Vestal Virgins is generally attributed to Numa; though we meet with the Sacred Fire long before, and even in the Time of Aeneas. But perhaps Numa was the first who settled the Order, and built a Temple to the Goddess in Rome (a). Their Office was to attend upon the Rites of Vesta, the chief Part of it (b) being the Preservation of the Holy Fire, which Numa, fancying Fire to be the first Principle of all Things, committed to their Charge. Ovid tells us, that they understood nothing else but Fire by Vesta herself:

Nec tu aliud Vestam quam vivam intellige flammam (a).

Though sometimes he makes the same as the Earth :

— Tellus Vestaque numen idem est (b).

Polydore Virgil reconciles the two Names by observing that Fire, or the Natural Heat by which all Things are produced, is enclosed in the Earth (c).

They were obliged to keep this Fire with all the Care in the World; and, if it happened to go out, it was thought Impiety to light it at any common Flame, but they made Use of the pure and unpolluted Rays of the Sun (d). Every Year on the first of March, whether it had gone out or no, they always lighted it a-new (e). There were other Relicks and Holy Things under their Care, of which we have very uncertain Accounts; particularly the famous Palladium brought from Troy by Aeneas; for Ulysses and Diomedes stole only a counterfeit one, a Copy of the other, which was kept with less Care.

Dionysius and Plutarch assure us, that Numa constituted only four Virgins for this Service; and that the same Number remained ever after. And therefore a great Antiquary is certainly mistaken, when he makes the Number increased to twenty (f).

They were admitted into this Society between the Years of six and ten; and were not properly said to be elected or created, but Captæ, taken; the Pontifex Maximus taking her that he liked by the Hand, and leading her, as it were by Force, from her Parents (g).

The chief Rules prescribed them by their Founder, were to vow the strictest Chastity for the Space of Thirty Years. The first ten they were only Novices, obliged to learn the Ceremonies; and perfect themselves in the Duties of their Religion. The next ten Years they actually discharged the Sacerdotal Function; and spent the remaining ten in teaching and instructing others. After this Term was compleated, they had Liberty to leave the Order, and chuse any Condition of Life that best suited with their Inclinations, though this was counted unlucky, and therefore seldom put in Practice. Upon Commission of any lesser Faults, they were punished as the Pontifex Maximus (who had the Care of them) though fit. But, if they broke their Vow of Virginity, they were constantly buried alive in a Place without the City Wall, allotted for that particular Use (a), and thence called Campus Sceleratus, as Festus informs us.

But this severe Condition was recompensed with several Privileges and Prerogatives. When they went Abroad they had the Fasces carried before them (b), a Consul, or the Prætor being obliged to give them the Way (c). And if in their Walk they casually lighted upon a Malefactor leading to Execution, they had the Favour to deliver him from the Hands of Justice, provided they made Oath that their Meeting was purely accidental, without any Compact or Design (d).

Of the Duumviri, Decemviri, and Quindecemviri, Keepers of the Sibylline Writings: And of the Corybantes, or Priests of Cybele, and the Epulones.

THE first of these Orders, famous only on Account of the Relicks they preserved, owe their Original to this Occasion.

A strange Old Woman came once to Tarquinius Superbus with nine Books, which she said, were the Oracles of the Sibyls, and proffered to sell them. But the King making some Scruple about the Price, she went away and burnt three of them; and returning with the six, asked the same Sum as before. Tarquinius only laughed at the Humour: Upon which the Old Woman left him once more; and, after she had burnt three others, came again with them that were left, but still kept to her old Terms. The King began now to wonder at her Obstinacy, and thinking there might be something more than ordinary in the Business, sent for the Angurs to consult what was to be done. They, when their Divinations were performed, soon acquainted him what a Piece of Impiety he had been guilty of, by refusing a Treasure sent to him from Heaven, and commanded him to give whatever she demanded for the Books that remained. The Woman received her Money, and delivered the Writings; and only charging them by all Means to keep them sacred, immediately vanished. Two of the Nobility were presently after chosen to be the Keepers of these Oracles, which were laid up with all imaginable Care in the Capitol, in a Chest under Ground. They could not be consulted without a special Order of the Senate, which was never granted, unless upon the receiving some notable Defeat, upon the rising of any considerable Mutiny or Sedition in the State; or upon some other extraordinary Occasion (a); several of which we meet with in Livy (b).

The Number of Priests, in this, as in most other Orders, were several Times altered. The Duumviri continued 'till about the Year of the City 388, when the Tribunes of the People preferred a Law, that there should be ten Men elected for this Service, Part out of the Nobility, and Part out of the Commons. We meet with the Duumviri all along from hence, 'till about the Time of Sylla the Dictator, when the Quindecenviri occur: Which Addition of five Persons may, with very good Reason, be attributed to him who increased so many of the other Orders. It were needless to give any farther Account of the Syllis, than that they are generally agreed to have been ten in Number; for which we have the Authority of Varro; though some make them nine, some four, some three, and some only one (c). They all lived in different Ages and Countries, were all Prophetesses; and, if we believe the common Opinion, foretold the coming of our Saviour. As to the Writing, Dempster tells us it was in Lin (d). But one would think the common Phrase of Folia Sibyllæ, used by Virgil, Horace, and other credible Authors, should argue, that they wrote their Prophecies on Leaves of Trees; especially if we consider the great Antiquity which is generally allowed them, and that we are assured at the same Time by Pliny (e), that this was the oldest Way of Writing.

Solinus acquaints us, that these Books which Tarquin bought were burnt in the Conflagration of the Capitol, the Year before Sylla's Dictatorship (a). Yet there were others of their inspired Writings, or at least Copies or Extracts of them, gathered up in Greece and other Parts, upon a special Search made by Order of the Senate; which were kept with the same Superstition as the former, 'till about the Time of Theodosius the Great, when, the greatest Part of the Senate having embraced the Christian Faith, such Vanities began to grow out of Fashion; till at last Stilico burnt them all, under Honorius, for which he is so severely censured by the noble Poet Rutilius, in his ingenious Itinerary.

*Nec tantum Geticis grassatus proditor armis,
Ante Sibyllinæ fata cremavit Opis.
Odinus Althæam conjuncto funere torris;
Nisæum crinem flere putantur aves.
At Stilico æterni fatalia pignora libri,
Et plenas voluit præcipitare colus.*

Not only Roman Arms the Wretch betray'd
To barbarous Foes; before that cursed Deed,
He burnt the Writings of the Sacred Maid.
We hate Althæa for the fatal Brand;
When Nisus fell, the weeping Birds complain'd:
More cruel he than the revengeful Fair;
More cruel he than Nisus' Murtheter;
Whose impious Hands into the Flames have thrown
The heavenly Pledges of the Roman Crown,
Unravelling all the Doom that careful Fate had spun.

Among all the Religious Orders, as we meet with none of tene in Authors, so there were none of such an extravagant Constitution as the Priests of Cybele. We find them under the different Names of (b) Curetes, Corybantes, Galli, and Idi Dactyli; but can scarce get one tolerable Etymology of either. As for Cybele herself, she is generally taken for the Earth, and is the same with Rhea, Ops, Berecynthia, the Idean Mother, the Mother of the Gods, and the Great Goddess. She was invited and received into Rome, from Pessinus in Galatia, with great Solemnity, upon Advice of the Sibylline Oracles (c).

(a) Polybist. c. 9. (b) Varryf. Antiq. lib. 4. (c) Liv. lib. 29. cap. 24.

But to return to her Priests : We find little of any Certainty about them, only that they were all Eunuchs, and by Nation Phrygians ; and that in their solemn Processions they danced in Armour, making a confused Noise with Timbrels, Pipes, and Cymbals, howling all the while as if they were mad, and cutting themselves as they went along. One would little think that this was the Goddess who required such a sacred Silence in her Mysteries, as Vigil(a) would persuade us she did. And the best we could suppose at the Sight of this bawling Retinue, is, that they were going to settle a Swarm of Bees ; for which Service the same Poet recommends the Use of the Cymbals of Cybele. (b.)

But we cannot have better Relation of the Original, and the Manner of their strange Solemnity, than what Lucretius has given us in his Second Book :

*Hanc variae gentes, antiquo more sacrorum,
Ileam vocitant Matrem, Phrygiaeque catervas
Dant comites ; qui primum ex illis finibus edunt
Per terrarum orbem fruges cepisse creari.
Gallos attribuant quia, numen qui volarent
Matris, & ingrati genitoribus inventi sunt,
Significare velunt indignos esse putandos,
Vivam progeniam qui in oras luminis edant.
Tympana tenta tonant palmis & cymbala circum
Concava raucisonoque mirantur cornua cantu,
Et Phrygio stimulat numero cava tibia mentes ;
Telaque præportant vilenti signa furoris,
Ingratos animos, atque impia pectora vulgi
Conterrere metu quæ possint numine divæ.*

*Illic armata manus (Curetas nomine Graii Quos memorant Phrygios) inter se fortè catervis
Ludunt, in numerumque exsultant sanguine lati ; &
Terrificas caputum quotientes numine cristas.
Dilectos riserunt Curetas ; qui Jovis illum
Lagitum in Cretâ quondam oculâtisse feruntur,
Cum puri circum puerum pernice choreâ
Anati in numerum pulsarent æribus æra,
Ne Saturnus eam matris mandaret adeptus,
Eternumque duret matri sub pectore vulnus.*

Concerning her, fond Superstition frames
A thousand odd Conceits, a thousand Names,
And gives her a large Train of Phrygian Dames :

(a) Pier. d. 3.(b) Georg. 4.

Because in Phrygia Corn at first took Birth,
 And thence was scattered o'er the other Earth.
 They Eunuch all their Priests; from whence 'tis shown,
 That they deserve no Children of their own,
 Who, or abuse their Sires, or disrespect,
 Or treat their Mothers with a cold Neglect;
 Their Mothers whom they should adore——
 Amidst her Pomp fierce Drums and Cymbals beat,
 And the hoarse Horns with rattling Notes do threat;
 The Pipe, with Phrygian Airs disturbs their Souls,
 'Till, Reason overthrown, mad Passion rules.
 They carry Arms, those dreadful Signs of War,
 To raise in th' impious Rout Religious Fear.

Here some in Arms dance round among the Crowd,
 Look dreadful gay in their own sparkling Blood,
 Their Crests still shaking with a dreadful Nod.
 These represent those armed Priests who strove
 To drown the tender Cries of Infant Jove:
 By dancing quick, they made a greater Sound,
 And beat their Armour as they danc'd around,
 Lest Saturn should have sound, and eat the Boy,
 And Ops for ever mourn'd her prattling Joy.

Mr. Creech.

But we must not omit a more comical though a shorter Account that we have of them in Juvenal:

——*Matrisque Deum chorus intrat, & ingens
 Semivir obscuro facies reverenda minori,
 Mollia qui raptâ secuit genitalia testâ,
 'Jampridem cui rauca cobors, cui tympana cedunt
 Plebeia* ————— (a).

And Cybele's Priests, an Eunuch at their Head,
 About their Streets a mad Procession lead;
 The venerable Gelding, large and high,
 O'erlooks the Herd of his inferior Fry,
 His awkward Clergymen about him prance,
 And beat their Timbrels to their mystick Dance.

Mr. Dryden.

The Epulones, at their first Creation, Levy (b) assures us were only three: Soon after they were increased to seven; whence

(a) Sat. 6.

b. l. 5 33.

They are commonly called Septemviri Epulonum, or barely Septemviri, or the Septemviratus; and some report that Julius Cæsar, by adding three more, changed them to a Decemvirate; though it is certain they kept their old Name. They had their Name from a Custom which obtained among the Romans, in Time of publick Danger, of making a sumptuous Feast in their Temples, to which they did, as it were, invite the Deities themselves. For their Statues were brought on rich Beds, with their Pulvinarii too, or Pillows, and placed at the most honourable Part of their Table as the principal Guests. These Regalies they called Epula, or Leſiſternia; the Care of which belonged to the Epulones. This Priesthood is by Pliny Junior set on an equal Foot with that of the Augurs; when, upon a Vacancy in each Order, he supplicates his Maſter Trajan to be admitted to either. The whole Epiſtle ought to be ſet down for an Example of Modelly and Wit.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the ROMAN Sacrifices.

THE Word Sacrificium more properly ſignifies the Thing offered, than the Action of Offering. The two common Words to expreſs the former were Viſtina and Hoſtia; which though they are very often confounded, yet by the firſt Word are properly meant the greater Sort of Sacrifices, by the other the leſs.

Though every Deity had ſome peculiar Rites and Inſtitutions, and conſequently different Sort of Sacrifices, in which the greateſt Part of the Publick Worſhip then conſiſted, yet there were ſome ſtanding Rules and Ceremonies to be obſerved in all.

The Prieſt (and ſometimes the Perſon that gave the Viſtim) went before in a white Garment free from Spots and Figures: For Cicero tells us, that white is the moſt acceptable Colour to the Gods; I ſuppoſe, becauſe it ſeems to denote Purity and Innocence.

The Beast to be sacrificed, if it was of the larger Sort, used to be marked on the Horns with Gold; if of the lesser Sort, it was crowned with the Leaves of that Tree which the Deity was thought most to delight in, for whom the Sacrifice was designed. And besides these, they wore the Insulæ and Vittæ, a Sort of White Fillets, about their Head.

Before the Procession went a publick Crier, proclaiming Hoc age to the People, to give them Notice that they should forbear Working, and attend to the Solemnity. The Pipers and Harpers too were the Forerunners of the Show; and what Time they could spare from their Instruments, was spent in assisting the Crier to admonish the People. The Sacrifice being brought to the Altar, the Priest took hold of the Altar with one Hand, and ushered in the Solemnity with a Prayer to all the Gods; mentioning Janus and Vesta always first and last, as if through them they had Access to the rest. During the Prayer, some publick Officer was to command the strictest Silence, for which the common Expression was, Favete Linguis, a Phrase used by Horace (a), Juvenal (b), Tibullus (c), &c. And the Piper played all the while to hinder the hearing of any unlucky Noise. After his Prayer, the Priest began the Sacrifice with what they called Immolatio (though, by Synecdoche, the Word is often taken for the whole Act of Sacrificing) the Throwing some Sort of Corn and Frankincense, together with the Mola, i. e. Bran or Meal mixed with Salt, upon the Head of the Beast. In the next Place, he sprinkled Wine between the Horns; a Custom very often taken Notice of by the Poets; so Virgil:

*Ipse tenens dextrâ pateram pulcherrima Dida,
Candentis vaccæ media inter cornua fundit* (d).

O'er the white Heifer's Horns the beauteous Queen Holds the rich Plate, and pours the Wine between.

And Ovid more expressly:

*Rode caper vitæ; tamen hinc cum stabis ad aras,
In tuo quod fundi cornua possit, erit* (e).

Go wanton Goat, about the Vineyard browse
On the young Shoots, and stop the rising Juice;
You'll leave enough to pour between your Horns,
When for your Sake the hallow'd Altar burns.

But before he poured the Wine on the Beast, he put the Plate to his own Mouth, and just touched it with his Lips, giving it those that stood near him to do the like. This they termed Libatio.

In the next Place he plucked off some of the roughest Hairs growing between the Horns of the Beast, and threw them into the Fire, as the prima Libimina :

*Et summas capiens media inter cornua setas,
Ignibus imponit sacris, libimina prima (a).*

The bristling Hairs that on the Forehead grew,
As the first Offering on the Fire she threw.

And now turning himself to the East, he only made a Sort of crooked Line with his Knife from the Forehead to the Tail; and then delivered the Beast to the publick Servants to kill. We find these inferior Officers under the several Names of Pope, Agones, Cultrarii, and Victimarii : Their Business, besides the Killing of the Beast, was to take off his Skin to bowel him, and to wash the whole Body. Then the Aruspex's Duty came in Place, to search the Entrails for good and bad Omens. When this was over, the Priests had nothing else to do but to lay what Parts they thought fittest for the Gods upon the Altar, and to go and regale themselves upon the rest. CHAP. IX.

Of the ROMAN Year.

WE meet with three Accounts in Use at several Times among the Romans ; which owe their Original to Romulus, Numa, and Julius Cæsar. Romulus divided his Year into ten Months, which Plutarch would persuade us had no certain or equal Term, but consisted some of twenty Days, some of thirty-five, and some of more (a). But he is generally allowed to have settled the Number of Days with a great deal more Equality, allotting to March, May, Quintilis, and October, one and thirty Days : To April, June, Sextilis, November, and December, thirty, making up in all three hundred and four Days (a) :

(a) Plut. in Numa.

Scilicet arma magis quàm sidera, Romule, noras.

Scaliger indeed is very angry that People should think the Romans had ever any other Account, than by twelve Months (b). But it is probable that the Testimonies of Varro, Macrobius, Censorinus, Ovid, &c. will over-rule the bare Words of Licinius, Macer and Fenestella, which are all he produces. As to the Names of Romulus's Months, the first to be sure was consecrated to Mars, the Father of the State. The next too may be fetched from Venus, the other Guardian Parent of the Romans, if we admit of the Allusion between the Word Aprilis and Ἀφροδίτη, her Name in Greek : Though it is generally derived from Aperio, to open, because this is the chief Part of the Spring, in which the Buds and Flowers open and disclose themselves (c). May he so named from Maia the Mother of Mercury, according to Plutarch (d) ; though Macrobius makes the Maia, to whom May was dedicated, the same as Rhea, Ops, or the Earth, and different from Mercury's Mother (e). Ovid brings it à Senibus, i. e. à Majoribus (f). June either comes from Juventus, because this is the youthful and gay Part of the Year (g) ; or else it is a Contraction of Junonius, and dedicated to the Goddess Juno (h). The other Months he denominated as they stood in Order : So Quintilis is no more than the fifth Month, Sextilis than the sixth, and so on : But these two afterwards changed their Names to July and August, in Honor of Julius Caesar, and his Successor Augustus. As Nero had afterwards called April Neronis (i) ; so Plutarch tells us, that Domitian too, in imitation of them, gave the two Months immediately following the Names of Germanicus and Domitianus ; but he being slain, they recovered their old Denominations (k).

Numa was a little better acquainted with the Celestial Motions than his Predecessor ; and therefore undertaking to reform the Kalendar, in the first Place he added the two Months of Ja-

January and February; the first of which he dedicated to the God Janus; the other took its Name from Februus, to purify, because the Feasts of Purification were celebrated in that Month (a). To compose these two Months, he put fifty Days to the old three hundred and four, to make them answer the Course of the Moon; and then took six more from the six Months that had even Days, adding one odd Day more than he ought to have done, merely out of Superstition, and to make the Number fortunate. However, he could get but eight and twenty Days for February; and therefore that Month was always counted unlucky (b). Besides this, he observed the Difference between the Solar and the Lunar Course to be eleven Days; and, to remedy the Inequality, he doubled those Days after every two Years, adding an interstitial Month to follow February, which Plutarch calls in one Place Mercedinus (c), and in another Mercedonius (d). But the Care of this Intercalation being left to the Priests, they clapped in or left out the Month whenever they pleased, as they fancied it lucky or unlucky, and so made such mad Work, that the Festivals and solemn Days for Sacrifice were removed by little and little, 'till, at last, they came to be kept at a Season quite contrary to what they had been formerly (e).

Julius Caesar was the first that undertook to remedy this Disorder; and to this Purpose he called in the best Philosophers and Mathematicians of his Time to settle the Point. In order to bring Matters right, he was forced to make one confused Year of fifteen Months, or four hundred and forty-five Days; but, to preserve a due Regulation for the future, he took away the Intercalary Months, and adding ten Days to Numa's three hundred and fifty-five, equalled them to the Course of the Sun, except six odd Hours. The ten Days he distributed among those seven Months that had before but nine and twenty; and as for the six Hours, he ordered them to be let alone 'till they made up a whole Day; and this every fourth Year he put in the same Place where the Month used to be inserted before (f); and that was just five Days before the End of February, or next before the sixth of the Calends of March. For this Reason the supernumerary Day had the Name of Dies Bissextus; and thence the Leap Year came to be called Annus Bissextilis.

But the Priests, who had been the Authors of the old Confusion, committed as great a Blunder in the new Computation, by interposing the Leap-Day at the Beginning of every fourth Year instead of the End; till Augustus Cæsar brought it into the right Course again (a), in which it has continued ever since, and is followed by a great Part of Europe at this Day.

Yet because their wanted eleven Minutes in the six odd Hours in Julius's Year, the Equinoxes and Solstices losing something continually, were found, about the Year 1582, to have run back ten whole Days: For which Reason, Pope Gregory at that Time undertook a new Reformation of the Kalendar, cutting off ten Days to bring them to their proper Places. This Account they call the Gregorian or New Style, which is observed too in many Parts of Europe.

CHAPTER X.

The Distinction of the ROMAN Days.

WHEN Numa divided the Year into twelve Months, he made a Distinction too in the Days, ranking them in these three Orders: Dies Festi, Profesti, and Intercisi.

The first Sort was consecrated to the Gods:

The second allotted for the civil Business of Men:

The third divided between sacred and ordinary Employments.

The Dies Festi were set apart for the Celebration of these four Solemn ties, Sacrificia, Epulæ, Ludi, and Feriæ.

Sacrificia, were no more than publick Sacrifices to the Gods.

Epulæ, were a Sort of Banquets celebrated to the Honor of the Deities.

Ludi were publick Sports instituted with the same Design.

Feriæ, were either publick or private.

The publick were of four Sorts: Stativæ, Conceptivæ, Imperativæ, and Nundinæ.

Feriæ Stativæ, were publick Feasts kept by the whole City, according to the set Time appointed in the Kalendar for their Observation; as the Ægonalia, Carmentalia, Lupercalia, &c.

Feriæ

Feriæ Conceptivæ, were such as the Magistrates, or Priests, appointed annually to be celebrated upon what Days they pleased, as the Latinæ, Paganalia, Compitalia, &c.

Feriæ Imperativæ, were such as the Consuls, Prætors, or Dictators, instituted by Virtue of their own Authority, and commanded to be observed upon solemn Occasions, as the Gaining of a Victory, and the like.

Nundinæ, were Days set apart for the Concourse of the People out of the Country and neighbouring Towns, to expose their Commodities to Sale, the same as our greater Markets or Fairs. They had the Name of Nundinæ, because they were kept every ninth Day, as Ovid informs us (a). It must be remembered, that though the Nundinæ at first were of the Number of the Feriæ, yet they were afterwards by a Law declared to be Dies Fasti, that the Country People might not be hindered in their Work, but might at the same Time perform their Business of Market and Sale, and also have their Controversies and Causes decided by the Prætor; whereas otherwise they must have been forced to come to Town again upon the usual Court-Days.

Feriæ Privatæ, were Holy-days observed by particular Persons or Families upon several Accounts; as Birth-days, Funerals, and the like.

Thus much for the Dies Fasti.

The Profesti were Fasti, Comitiales, Comperendini, Stati, and Præliares.

Dies Fasti, were the same as our Court-Days; upon which it was lawful for the Prætor to sit in Judgment, and consequently Fari, tria Verba, to say those three solemn Words, Do, Dies, Addico, I sit here to give Laws, declare Right, adjudge Causes. All other Days (except the Intercisi) were called the Nefasti; because it was not lawful to say those three Words upon them; that is, the Courts were not open. But we may observe from a Phrase of Horace (b), that Dies Nefastus signifies an unlucky Day, as well as a Non-Court-Day.

Dies Comitiales, were such Days as the Comitia, or publick Assemblies of the People, were held upon: Or, as Ovid styles them, — Quis populum jus est includere septis (c).

Days when People are shut up to vote.

(a) Eglog. 1. vers. 54.

(b) Lib. 2. Od. 13.

(c) Idem. 1. vers. 57.

Dies Comperendini, were Days when Persons that had been sued might give Bail; properly, Days of Adjournment.

Dies Stati, were Days appointed for the Decision of any Cause between a Roman and a Forcigner.

Dies Præliares, were such Days upon which they thought it lawful to engage in any Action of Hostility: For during the Time of some particular Feasts, as the Saturnalia, the Latinae, and that which they called Cum mundus patet, consecrated to Dis and Proserpina, they reckoned it a Piece of Impiety to raise, march, or exercise their Men, or to encounter with the Enemy, unless first attacked.

If we make a Division of the Roman Days into Fortunate and Unfortunate; Dies Postriduanæ, i. e. the next Day after the Kalends, Nones or Ides, were always reckoned of the latter Sort; and therefore had the Names of Dies Atri.

A. Gellius gives us the Reason of this Observation from Verrius Flaccus, because they had taken Notice for several Ages, that those Days had proved unlucky to the State in the Loss of Battles, Towns, and other Casualties (a).

He tells us in the same Place, that the Day before the Fourth of the Kalends, Nones or Ides, was always reckoned unfortunate; but he does not know for what Reason, unless that he finds the great Overthrow at Cannæ to have happened on such a Day.

C H A P X I.

Of the Kalends, Nones and Ides.

THE Way the Romans used to reckon the Days of their Months was by the Kalends, Nones, and Ides. Romulus began his Months always upon the first Day of the Moon, and was followed in this by the Authors of the other Accounts, to avoid the altering of the immoveable Feasts. Therefore every new Moon, one of the inferior Priests used to assemble the People in the Capitol, and call over as many Days as there were between that and the Nones: And so from the old Word Calo, or the Greek καλῶ, to call, the first of these Days had the Name of Kalends. But we must remember, that this Custom of calling the Days continued no longer than the Year of the City 450, when C. Flavius, the Curule Edile, ordered the Fasti, or Kalendar, to be set up in publick Places, that every Body might know the Difference of Times, and the Return of the Festivals (a).

The Nones were so called because they reckoned nine Days from the Ides.

The Ides were generally about the Middle of the Month, and then we may derive the Word from Iduare, an obsolete Verb, signifying to divide.

The Kalends were always fixed to the first Day of every Month, but the Nones and the Ides in four Months were on different Days than in the other eight. For March, May, July and October had six Nones a-piece, the others only four. Therefore in the first, the Nones were the 7th, and the Ides the 15th; in the last, the Nones the 5th, and the Ides the 13th.

In reckoning these, they always went backwards, thus, January 1, was the first of the Kalends of January: December 31, Prid. Kal. Jan. Decemb. 30. tertio Kal. Jan. and so on to the 13th; and that was Idus Decembris; and then the 12th Prid. Iduum Decem. the 11th, 3 Iduum Decemb. and so on to the 5th Day, and that was Nonæ Decemb. and then again the 4th Prid. Nonarum Decemb. the third 3 Non. Decemb. the second 4 Non. Decemb. and the first Kalendæ Decemb.

We must observe, That when we meet with Kalendus Nonus or Idus, in the Accusative Case, the Preposition ante is always understood: As tertio Kalendas, Idus or Nonas, is the same as tertio Die ante Kal. Non, or Idus.!

The most remarkable Festivals of the ROMANS, as they stand in the Kalendar.

THE Kalends, or the first Day of January, was noted for the entering of the Magistrates on their Office; and for the wishing of good Fortune, and sending Presents to one another among Friends (a).

a, Cic. Epist. 1. v. 71.

The Ninth (or quint. Id.) was the Feast of the Agonalia, instituted by Numa Pompilius, in Honour of Janus, and attended with the æyōves, the solemn Exercises and Combats; whence, in Ovid's Judgment (a) it took its Name.

The Eleventh (or tert. Id.) was the Feast of the Carmentalia, in Memory of Carmenta, Evander's Mother.

February the Fifteenth, or the Fifteenth of the Kalends of March, was the Feast of the Lupercalia, when the Luperci make their wild Procession, (b) which has been described before.

February the Eleventh of the Third of the Ides, was the Feralia, or Feast in Honour of the Ghosts; when People carried some little Sort of Offering to the Graves of their deceased Friends. Ovid gives us so handsome an Account of it, that we must not pass it by :

*Est honor et tumulus; animas placare paternas (c),
Parvaque in extructas munera ferre pyras :
Parva petunt manes : pietas pro divite grata est
Munere : non avidos Styx habet ima Deos.
Tegula porrectis satis est velata coronis;
Et sparsæ fruges, parvaque mica salis.*

Tombs have their Honours too : Our Parents crave
Some flesh or Present to adorn the Grave.
Slender the Present which the Ghosts we owe ;
Those Powers observe not what we give, but how.
No greedy Souls disturb the happy Seats below.
They only ask a Tile with Garlands crown'd,
And Fruit and Salt to scatter on the Ground.

The Day after the Feralia, were the Charistia, or Festival of Love, when all the Relations in every Family met together and had a Feast.

On the 22d or 23d (according to the different Length of this Month) were the Terminalia, sacred to Terminus, the Guardian of Boundaries and Land-marks; on which they now offered to him Cakes and Fruits, and sometimes Sheep and Swine, notwithstanding the ancient Prohibition of bloody Sacrifices in this Case; the Reason of which Prohibition Plutarch (d) supposes to have been, lest they should violate the Tokens of Peace and Agreement, by staining them with Blood.

On the Kalends of March were the Matronalia, a Feast kept by the Roman Matrons to the Honour of Mars; to whom they thought themselves obliged for the Happiness of bearing good Children; a Favour which he first conferred on his own Mistress, Rhea (a).

This Feast was the Subject of Horace's Ode, Martiis cælebs quid agam Calendis, &c.

On the same Day began the solemn Feast of the Salii, and their Procession with the Ancylia, which have been spoken of before.

The Ides of March was the Feast of Anna Perenna; in Honour either of the Sister of Dido, who fled into Italy to Æneas; or of one Anna, an old Gentlewoman, that, in a great Dearth at Rome, for some Time furnished the common People with Corn out of her own Store. The Celebration of this Day consisted in Drinking and Feasting largely among Friends. The common People met for this Purpose in the Fields near the Tiber, and, building themselves Booths and Arbours, kept the Day with all Manner of Sports and Jollity; wishing one another to live as many Years as they drank Cups (b).

The same Day was, by a Decree of the Senate, ordered to be called Parricidium, for the Murder of Julius Cæsar, which happened on it (c). Appian, in his second Book, tells us of a very different Law that Delabella the Consul would have preferred upon this Occasion; and that was to have the Day called ever after, Natalis urbis, the Birth-day of the City; as if their Liberty had revived upon the Death of Cæsar.

March the 19th, or the 14th of the Kalends of April, began the Quinquatrus, or Quinquatria, the Feast of Minerva, continuing five Days. It was during this Solemnity that the Boys and Girls used to pray to the Goddess for Wisdom and Learning, of which she had the Patronage: To which Custom Juvenal alludes:

Elegium & somnam Demosthenis aut Ciceronis Incipit optare, & tatis Quinquatribus optat (d).

(a) Ovid. Fast. 3. v. 711. (b) Ibid. v. 523, &c. (c) Sueton. in Jul. cap. 83. (d) Sat. 10.

To rival Tully or Demosthenes,
 Begins to wish in the Quinquatrian Days,
 And wishes all the Feast—

At the same Time the Youths carried their Masters their Fee, or Present, termed Minerval.

April the 19th, or the 13th of the Kalends of May, was the Cerealia, or Feast of Ceres, in which Solemnity the chief Actors were the Women. No Person that mourned was allowed to bear a Part in this Service; and therefore it is very remarkable, that, upon the Defeat at Cannæ, there was such an universal Grief in the City, that the Anniversary Feast of Ceres was forced to be omitted (a).

April the 21st, or the 11th of the Kalends of May, was the Palilia, or Feast of Pales, Goddess of Shepherds. This is sometimes called Parilia à pariendo, because Prayers were now made for the Fruitfulness of the Sheep. Ovid tells us a very tedious Course of Superstition that the Shepherds ran through upon this Day. They always contrived to have a great Feast at Night; and, when most of them were pretty merry, they concluded all with dancing over the Fires that they made in the Field with Heaps of Stubble (b).

The same Day was called Urbis Natalis, being the Day on which the City was built (c).

April the 25th, or the 7th of the Kalends of May, was the Robigalia, a Feast of the Goddess Robigo, or the God Robigus, who took Care to keep of the Mildew and Blasting from the Corn and Fruit (d).

April the 27th, or the 5th of the Kalends of May, was the Floralia, or Feast of Flora, Goddess of Flowers (e), when the publick Sports were celebrated that will be hereafter described (f).

In the remaining Part of the Year we meet with no Festival of extraordinary Note, except the Poplifugium and the Saturnalia.

The Original of the famous Nonæ Caprotinæ or Poplifugium, is doubly related by Plutarch, according to the two common Opinions. First, because Romulus disappeared on that Day, when an Assembly being held in the Palus Caprææ, or Goat's-marsh, on a sudden happened a most wonderful Tempest, accompanied with terrible Thunder, and other unusual Disorders in the Air. The common People fled all away to secure themselves; but after the Tempest was over, could never find their King (a).

(a) Liv. lib. 22. (b) Ovid. Fast. v. 771, &c. (c) Ibid. v. 806. (d) Ibid. v. 901. (e) Ibid. v. 943. (f) See Book 5. cap. 7.

Or else from Caprificus, a wild Fig-tree, because in the Galic War, a Roman Virgin, who was Prisoner in the Enemy's Camp, taking the Opportunity when she saw them one Night in Disorder, got up into a wild Fig-Tree, and holding out a lighted Torch toward the City, gave the Romans a Signal to fall on; which they did with such good Success as to obtain a considerable Victory (b).

The Original of the Saturnalia, as to the Time, is unknown, Macrobius assuring us, that it was celebrated in Italy, long before the Building of Rome (c); the Story of Saturn, in whose Honour it was kept, every Body is acquainted with. As to the Manner of the Solemnity, besides the Sacrifices and other Parts of publick Worship, there were several lesser Observations worth our Notice. As first, the Liberty now allowed to Servants to be free and merry with their Masters, so often alluded to in Authors. It is probable this was done in Memory of the Liberty enjoyed in the Golden Age under Saturn, before the Names of Servant and Master were known to the World. Besides this, they sent Presents to one another among Friends: No War was to be proclaimed, and no Offender executed: The Schools kept a Vacation, and nothing but Mirth and Freedom was to be met with in the City. They kept at first only one Day, the 14th of the Kalends of January; but the Number was afterwards increased to three, four, five, and some say, seven Days (d).

PART II. BOOK III.

Of the Civil Government of the Romans.

CHAP. I.

Of the General Division of the People.

ROMULUS, as soon as his City was tolerably well filled with Inhabitants, made a Distinction of the People according to Honour and Quality; giving the better Sort the Name of Patres or Patricii, and the rest the common Title of Plebeii. To bind the two Degrees more firmly together, he recommended to the Patricians some of the Plebeians to protect and countenance; the former being stiled Patroni, and the latter Clients. The Patrons were always their Clients Counsellors in difficult Cases, their Advocates in Judgements; in short, their Advisers and Overseers in all Affairs whatever. On the other Side, the Clients faithfully served their Patrons, not only paying them all imaginable Respect and Deference, but if Occasion required, assisting them with Money towards the defraying of any extraordinary Charges. But afterwards, when the State grew rich and great, though all other good Offices continued between them, yet it was thought a dishonourable Thing for the better Sort to take any Money of their Inferiors (a).

The Division of the People into the three distinct Orders of Senators, Knights and Commons, took its Rise about the Time of Tarquin's Expulsion. The Senators were such Persons as had been promoted to sit in the supreme Council of State either out of the Nobility or Commons. If out of the latter Order, they had the Honour of a Gold Ring, but not of a Horse kept at the publick Charge; as Mammius has nicely observed. The Knights were such Persons as were allowed a Gold Ring and a Horse at the publick Charge. The Commons were all the Rest of the People, besides these two Orders, including not only the inferior Populacy, but such of the Nobility too as had not yet been elected Senators; and such of the Gentry as had not a complete Knight's Estate: For Persons were admitted into the two higher Ranks according to their Fortunes; one that was worth eight hundred Sestertia, was capable of being chose Senator; one that had four hundred, might be taken into the Equestrian Order. Augustus afterwards altered the Senatorian Estate to twelve hundred Sestertia, but the Equestrian continued the same.

The proper common Terms by which the Knights are mentioned by Roman Authors, are Eques, Equestris ordinis, and Equestris loco natus. Of which the two former are in all Respects the very same. But the latter is properly applied to those Equites, whose Fathers were indeed of the same Order, but had never reached the Senatorian Dignity. For, if their Fathers had been Senators, they would have been said to have been born of the Senatorian, and not of the Equestrian Rank.

When we find the Optimates and the Populares opposed in Authors, we must suppose the former to have been those Persons, of what Rank soever, who stood up for the Dignity of the chief Magistrates, and the glorious Grandeur of the State; and who cared not if the inferior Members suffered for the Advancement of the commanding Powers. The latter we must take likewise for those Persons, of what Rank soever, who courted the Favour of the Commons, by encouraging them to sue for greater Privileges, and to bring Things nearer to a Level. For it would be unreasonable to make the same Distinction between the two Parties, as Sipontius and others lay down: "That the Populares were those who endeavoured by their " Words and Actions to ingratiate themselves with the Mul" titude; and the Optimates those who so behaved themselves in “all Affairs, as to make their Conduct approved by every good Man.” This Explication agrees much better with the Sound of the Words, than with the Sense of the Things, for at this Rate, the Optimates and the Populares will be only other Terms for the Virtuous and the Vicious, and it would be equally hard in such large Divisions of Men to acknowledge one Side to have been wholly honest, and to affirm the other to have been entirely wicked. I know that this Opinion is built on the Authority of Cicero; but if we look on him not only as a prejudiced Person, but as an Orator too, we shall not wonder, that, in distinguishing the two Parties, he gave to infamous a Mark to the Enemies Side, and so honourable a one to his own. Otherwise the Murderers of Cæsar (who were the Optimates) must pass for Men of the highest Probity; and the Followers of Augustus (who were of the opposite Faction) must seem in general a Pack of profligate Knaves. It would therefore be a much more moderate Judgement to found the Difference rather on Policy, than on Morality; rather on the Principles of Government, than of Religion and private Duty.

There is another common Division of the People into Nobiles, Novi, and Ignobiles, taken from the Right of using Pictures or Statues; an Honour only allowed to such whose Ancestors or themselves had borne some Curule Office, that is, had been Curule Edile, Censor, Prætor, or Consul. He that had the Pictures or Statues of his Ancestors, was termed Nobilis; he that had only his own Novus; he that had neither Ignobilis. So that Jus imaginis was much the same Thing among them, as the Right of bearing a Coat of Arms among us: And their Novus Homo is equivalent to our upstart Gentleman.

For a great while none but the Patricii were the Nobiles, because no Person, unless of that superior Rank, could bear any Curule Office. Hence in many Places of Livy, Sallust, and other Authors, we find Nobilitas used for the Patrician Order, and so opposed to Plebs. But in After times, when the Commons obtained a Right of enjoying those Curule Honours, they by the same Means procured the Title of Nobiles, and left it to their Posterity (a).

Such Persons as were free of the City, are generally distinguished into Ingenui, Liberti, and Libertini. The Ingenui were such as had been born free, and of Parents that had been always free. The Libertini were the Children of such as had been made free: Liberti, such as had been actually made free themselves.

The two common Ways of conferring Freedom were by Testament, and by Manumission. A Slave was said to be free by Testament, when his Master, in Consideration of his faithful Service, had left him free in his last Will: Of which Custom we meet with Abundance of Examples in every Historian.

These Kind of Liberti had the Title of Orcini, because their Masters were gone to Orcus. In Allusion to which Custom, when, after the Murder of Julius Cæsar, a great Number of unworthy Persons had thrust themselves into the Senate, without any just Pretensions, they were merrily distinguished by the Term of Senatores Orcini (a).

The Ceremony of Manumission was thus performed: The Slave was brought before the Consul, and, in After-times before the Prætor, by his Master, who, laying his Hand upon his Servant's Head, said to the Prætor, Hunc Hominem liberum esse volo; and with that, let him go out of his Hand, which they termed à manu emittere. Then the Prætor, laying a Rod upon his Head, called l'indicta, said, Dico eum liberum esse more Quiritum. Hence Persius, l'indicta postquam meus à Prætoris recessi.

After this the Lictor, taking the Rod out of the Prætor's Hand, struck the Servant several Blows on the Head, Face and Back; and nothing now remained but Pileo donari, to receive a Cap in Token of Liberty, and to have his Name entered in the common Roll of Freemen, with the Reason of his obtaining that Favour.

There was a third Way of bestowing Freedom, which we do not so often meet with in Authors; it was when a Slave, by the Consent and Approbation of his Master, got his Name to be inserted in the Censor's Roll: Such a Man was called liber censu; as the two already mentioned were liber testamento, and liber manumissione.

Of the S E N A T E.

THE Chief Council of State, and, as it were, the Body of Magistrates, was the Senate; which, as it has been generally reckoned the Foundation and Support of the Roman Greatness, so it was one of the earliest Constitutions in the Republick: For Romulus first chose out a hundred Persons of the best Repute for Birth, Wisdom, and Integrity of Manners, to assist him in the Management of Affairs, with the Name of Senatores or Patres, from their Age and Gravity (vel ætate, vel curæ similitudine Patres appellabantur, says Sallust;) a Title as honourable, and yet as little subject to Envy, as could possibly have been pitched upon. After the Admission of the Sabines into Rome, an equal Number of that Nation were joined to the former Hundred (a). And Tarquinius Priscus, upon his first Succession to the Crown, to ingratiate himself with the Commons, ordered another Hundred to be selected out of that Body, for an Addition to the Senate (b), which before had been ever filled with Persons of the higher Ranks. Sylla the Dictator made them up above four Hundred; Julius Cæsar nine Hundred; and, in the Time of the second Triumvirate, they were above a Thousand; no Distinction being made with Respect to Merit or Quality. But this Disorder was afterwards rectified by Augustus, and a Reformation made in the Senate, according to the old Constitution (c).

The Right of naming Senators belonged at first to the Kings; afterwards the Consuls chose, and referred them to the People for their Approbation: But, at last, the Censors engrossed the whole Privilege of conferring this Honour. He that stood first in the Censor's Roll, had the honourable Title of Princeps Senatûs (d): Yet the chief Magistrates, as the Consuls, Dictator, &c. were always his Superiors in the House.

Besides the Estate of eight Hundred, or, after Augustus, of twelve Hundred Septentia, no Person was capable of this Dignity but one who had already borne some Magistracy in the Commonwealth. And that there was a certain Age (even in latter

(a) Dionys. lib. 2.(b) Idem, lib. 3.(c) Sueton. in August. cap. 35.(d) A. Geil. lib. 3. cap. 18.

Times) required, is plain, from the frequent Use of Ætas Senatoria in Authors. Dio Cassius positively limits it to five and twenty (a), which was the soonest Time any one could have discharged the Quæstorship, the first Office of any considerable Note: Yet we meet with very many Persons promoted to this Order, without any Consideration had to their Years; as it usually happened in all other Honours whatever.

As to the general Title of Patres Conscripti given them in Authors, it was taken as a Mark of Distinction, proper to those Senators who were added to Romulus's Hundred either by Tarquinius Priscus, or by the People upon the Establishment of the Commonwealth: But in After-Times, all the Number were promiscuously stiled Patres and Patres Conscripti (b).

We may take a further View of the Senators, considered all together as a Council or Body.

The Magistrates, who had the Power of assembling the Senators, were only the Dictator, the Consuls, the Prætors, the Tribunes of the Commons, and the Interrex. Yet upon extraordinary Accounts, the same Privilege was allowed to the Tribuni Militum invested with Consular Power, and to the Decenvirs, created for the regulating the Laws; and to the other Magistrates chosen upon some unusual Occasion. In the first Times of the State they were called together by a publick Crier; but when the City grew larger, an Edict was published to command their Meeting (c).

The Places where they assembled were only such as had been formerly consecrated by the Augurs, and most commonly within the City; only they made Use of the Temple of Bellona without the Walls, for the giving Audience to Foreign Ambassadors, and to such Provincial Magistrates as were to be heard in open Senates, before they entered the City; as when they petitioned for a Triumph, and the like Cases. Pliny too has a very remarkable Observation, that whenever the Augurs reported that an Ox had spoke, which we often meet with among the ancient Prodigies, the Senate was presently to sit sub Dio, or in the open Air (d).

As for the Time of their Sitting, we must have Recourse to the common Distinction of Senatus legitimus and Senatus indictus.

The former was when the Senate met of Course, upon such Days as the Laws or Custom obliged them to. These were the Kalends, Nones, and Ides in every Month, 'till the Time of Augustus, who confined them to the Kalends and Ides. In the Months of September and October, by an Order of the same Emperor, the Senators were discharged from their necessary Attendance; except so many of them as made à Quorum, a Number sufficient by Law to dispatch Business: And therefore all the Time they drew Lots for their Appearance, or Excuse, as Suetonius informs us (a). We may observe from the same Author, that the Ides of March (called Parricidium, from the Murder of Julius Cæsar which happened on it) was particularly excepted; and a Decree passed, that the Senate should never meet on that Day for the future (b).

Senatus Indictus, was a Senate called for the Dispatch of any Business upon any other Day; except the Dies Comitiales, when the Senators were obliged to be present at the Comitia.

As soon as the Senate was sat, the Consul, or other supreme Magistrate, in the first Place performed some divine Service, and then proposed the Business to the House: Both which Actions they called referre ad Senatum (c).

When he had opened the Cause, he went round in Order (beginning with the Princeps Senatus, and the Designated Consuls) and asked every Body's Opinion; upon which, all that pleased, stood up, and gave their Judgement upon the Point.

It is very remarkable, that when any Senator was asked his Opinion, he had the Privilege of speaking as long as he pleased, as well about other Concerns as about the Matter in Hand: And therefore when any particular Member had a Design to hinder the passing of any Decree, it was a common Practice to protract his Speech 'till it was too late to make any Determination in the House.

When as many as thought fit had given their Judgements at large, the supreme Magistrate made a short Report of their several Opinions; and then, in order to the passing their Decree, ordered the Senators to divide, one Party to one Side of the House, and the opposite to the other. The Number being now told, the major Part determined the Case; and a Senatus Consultum was accordingly wrote by the publick Notaries at the Feet of the Chief Magistrate, being subscribed by the principal Members that promoted it.

But in Cases of little Concern, or such as required Expedition, the Formality of asking Opinions, and debating the Business, was laid aside, and a Decree passed upon the bare Division of the House, and the counting of the Numbers on both Sides. This was called Senatus-consultum per discessionem factum; the former simply Senatus-consultum (a).

Julius Capitolinus speaks of a Sort of Senatus-consulta, not described by any other Author; which he calls Senatus-consulta tacita; and tells us they were made in Reference to Affairs of great Secrecy, without the Admittance of the very publick Servants; but all the Business was done by the Senators themselves, after the passing of an Oath of Secrecy, 'till their Design should be effected (b).

There were several Things that might hinder the passing of a Decree in Senate; as in case of an Intercessio, or Interposing. This was commonly put in Practice by the Tribunes of the Commons, who reckoned it their Privilege: But it might be done too by any Magistrate of equal Authority with him that proposed the Business to the House: Or else when the Number required by Law for the passing of any Bill was not present; for that there was such a fixed Number is very evident, though nothing of Certainty can be determined any farther about it.

In both these Cases, the Opinion of the major Part of the Senators was not called Senatus-consultum, but Autoritas Senatus; their Judgement, not their Command; and signified little, unless it was afterwards ratified, and turned into a Senatus-consultum, as usually happened (c). Yet we must have a Care of taking Autoritas Senatus in this Sense, every Time we meet with it in Authors. For unless, at the same Time, there be Mention made of an Intercessio, it is generally to be understood as another Term for a Senatus-consultum; and so Tully frequently uses it: Sometimes both the Names are joined together; as the usual Inscription of the Decrees was in these initial Letters; S. C. A. i. e. Senatus-Consulti-Authoritas.

Besides these two Impediments, a Decree of Senate could not pass after Sun set, but was deferred till another Meeting.

All along, 'till the Year of the City 304, the written Decrees were in the Custody of the Consul, who might dispose of them as he thought proper, and either suppress or preserve them: But then a Law passed, that they should be carried always for the future to the Ædiles Plebis, to be laid up in the Temple of Ceres (d): Yet we find, that afterwards they were for the most Part preserved in the publick Treasury (e).

It may be further observed, that besides the proper Senators, any Magistrates might come into the House during their Honour, and they who had borne any Curule Office, after its Expiration. But then none of those who came into the House purely upon Account of their Magistracy, were allowed the Privilege of giving their Judgements upon any Matter, or of being numbered among the Persons who had Votes. Yet they tacitly expressed their Mind by going over to those Senators whose Opinions they embraced; and upon this Account they had the Name of Senatores Pedarii.

(a) P. Manut. de Sen. (b) Jul. Capit. in Gordian. (c) P. Manut. de Sen.

This gave Occasion to the Joke of Laberius the Mimic:

Caput sine lingua pedaria sententia est.

There was an old Custom too, in the Commonwealth, that the Sons of Senators might come into the House and hear the Proceedings. This, after it had been abrogated by a Law, and long disused, was at last revived by Augustus, who, in order to the bringing in the young Noblemen the sooner to the Management of Affairs, ordered that any Senator's Son, at the Time of his putting on the Toga Virilis, should have the Privilege of using the Latus Clavus, and of coming into the Senate (a).

C H A P. II.

Of the general Divisions of the Magistrates; and of the Candidates for Offices.

NOT to speak of the different Forms of Government which obtained among the Romans, or to decide the Case of Pre-eminency between them, we may in the next Place take a short View of the chief Magistrates under them all. Of those we meet with many general Divisions; as in Respect of Time, Magistratus Ordinarii and Extraordinarii; with Reference to the Persons, Patricii, Plebei, and Mixti; from their Quality, Majores and Minores; from their Manner of appearing in Publick, Curules and Non Curules; and lastly, from the Place of their Residence, Urbani and Provinciales (a). If we would pitch upon the clearest and most compendious Method, we must rank them according to the last Distinction, and describe in Order the most remarkable of the civil Offices at home and abroad. But it will be expected, that we first give some Account of the Persons that stood Candidates for these Honours. They borrowed the Name of Candidati from the Toga Candida, in which they were habited at the Time of their appearing for a Place. They wore this loose Gown open and ungirded, without any close Garment under; which some interpret as done with Design to avoid any Suspicion the People might have of Bribery and Corruption: But Plutarch (a) thinks it was either to promote their Interest the better, by suing in such an humble Habit; or else that such as had received Wounds in the Service of their Country, might the more easily demonstrate those Tokens of their Courage and Fidelity; a very powerful Way of moving the Affections of the People. But he disallows the Reasons abovementioned, because this Custom prevailed in Rome many Ages before Gifts and Presents had any Influence on the publick Suffrages; a Mischief to which he attributed, in a great Measure, the Ruin of the Commonwealth.

They declared their Pretensions generally about a Year before the Election; all which Time was spent in gaining and securing of Friends. For this Purpose they used all the Arts of Popularity, making their Circuits round the City very often; whence the Phrase, Ambire Magistratum, had its Rise. In their Walks they took the meanest Persons by the Hands; and not only used the more familiar Terms of Father, Brother, Friend, and the like, but called them too by their own proper Names. In this Service, they had usually a Notenclator, or Monitor, to assist them, who whispered every Body's Name in their Ears. For though Plutarch tells us of a Law which forbade any Candidate to make Use of a Prompter; yet at the same Time he observes, that Cato the Younger was the only Person who conformed to it, discharging the whole Business by the Help of his own Memory (b).

They had Reason to be very nice and cautious in the whole Method of their Address and Canvass; for an Affront, or perhaps a Jest, put upon the most inconsiderable Fellow, who was Master of a Vote, might sometimes be so far resented by the Mob, as to turn the Election another Way. There is a particular Story told of Scipio Nasica, which may confirm this Remark: When he appeared for the Place of Curule Aedile, and was making his Circuit to increase his Party, he lighted upon an honest plain Countryman, who was coming to Town, to give his Vote among the rest, and finding, as he shook him by the Hand, that the Flesh was very hard and callous, Pr'ythee Friend,

(a) In Cor. Romano.(b) Plut. in Catoe Utiens.

(says he) doſt uſe to walk upon thy Hands? The Clown was ſo far from being pleaſed with this Piece of Wit, that he complained of the Affront, and loſt the Gentleman the Honor which he ſued for.

Such Perſons as openly favoured their Deſigns have been diſtinguiſhed by the Names of Salutatores, Deductores, and Seſſatores (a). The firſt Sort only paid their Compliments to them at their Lodgings in the Morning; and then took their Leave. The ſecond waited upon them from thence as far as the Forum. The laſt compoſed their Retinue thro' the whole Circuit. Pliny has obliged us with a farther Remark, that not only the Perſon who ſtood for an Office, but ſometimes too the moſt conſiderable Men of their Party, went about in the ſame formal Manner, to beg Voices in their Behalf; And therefore when he would let us know his great Diligence in promoting the Intereſt of one of his Friends, he makes Uſe of the ſame Phraſes which are commonly applied to the Candidatis themſelves; as Ambire domos, Prenſare amicos, Circumire ſtationes (b); &c.

The Proceedings in the Elections will fall more properly under the Account of the Aſſemblies where they were managed.

CHAP. IV.

Of the CONSULS.

THE Conſular Office began upon the Expulſion of the Tarquins, in the Year of the City 244. There are ſeveral Derivations given of the Word, that of Cicero, à Conſulendo (a), is generally followed. Their Power was at firſt the ſame as that of the Kings, only reſtrained by Plurality of Perſons and Shortneſs of Time: Therefore Tully calls it Regum Imperium (b), and Regia Potestas (c). In War they commanded in Chief over Citizens and Associates, nor were they leſs abſolute in Peace, having the Government of the Senate itſelf, which they aſſembled or diſmiſſed at their Pleaſure. And though their Authority was very much impaired, firſt by the Tribunes of the People, and afterwards upon the Eſtabliſhment of the Empire; yet they were ſtill employed in conſulting the Senate, adminiſtering Juſtice, managing

managing Publick Games, and the like ; and had the Honour to characterize the Year by their own Names.

At the first Institution this Honour was confined to the Nobility ; but in the Year of the City 387, the Commons obtained the Privilege of having one of their own Body always an Associate in this Office. Sometimes indeed the Populacy were so powerful, as to have both Consuls chose out of their Order ; but generally speaking, one was a Nobleman, and the other a Commoner.

No Person was allowed to sue for this Office, unless he was present at the Election, and in a private Station ; which gave Occasion to the Civil Wars between Pompey and Cæsar ; as has been already observed. The common Age required in the Candidates was forty-two Years. This Cicero himself acquaints us with, if we allow a little Scope to his Way of speaking, when he says, that Alexander the Great, dying in the thirty-third Year, came ten Years short of the Consular Age (a). But sometimes the People dispensed with the Law, and the Emperors took very little Notice of the Restraint.

The Time of the Consuls Government, before Julius Cæsar, was always a complete Year : But he brought up a Custom of substituting Consuls at any Time for a Month or more, according as he pleased. Yet the Consuls, who were admitted the first of January, denominated the Year, and had the Title of Ordinarii ; the others being stiled Suffecti (b).

The chief Ornaments and Marks of their Authority were the white Robe edged with Purple, called Prætecta ; which in After-times they changed for the Toga Palmata, or Picta, before proper only to such Persons as had been honoured with a Triumph ; and the twelve Lictors, who went before one of them one Month, and the other the next, carrying the Fasces and the Securis, which, though Valerius Poplicola took away from the Fasces, yet it was soon after added again.

Their Authority was equal ; only in some smaller Matters, he had the Precedency, according to the Valerian Law, who was oldest ; and he, according to the Julian Law, who had most Children.

C H A P. V.

Of the Dictator and his Master of Horse.

THE Office of Dictator was of very early Original: For, the Latins entering into a Confederacy against Rome to support Tarquin's Cause after his Expulsion, the Senate were under great Apprehensions of Danger, by Reason of the Difficulty they found in procuring Levies to oppose them: While the poorer Commons, who had been forced to run themselves into Debt with the Patricians, absolutely refused to lift themselves, unless an Order of Senate might pass for a general Remission. Now the Power of Life and Death being lately taken from the Consuls by the Valerian Law, and Liberty given for an Appeal from them to the People, they could not compel any Body to take up Arms. Upon this Account they found it necessary to create a Magistrate, who for six Months should rule with absolute Authority, even above the Laws themselves. The first Person pitched upon for this Honour was Titus Largius Flavius, about A. U. C. 253, or 255 (a).

This supreme Officer was called Dictator, either because he was Dictus, named of the Consul, or else from his dictating and commanding what should be done (b). Though we sometimes meet with the naming of a Dictator upon a smaller Account, as the holding the Comitia for the Election of Consuls, the Celebration of publick Games, the fixing the Nail upon Jove's Temple (which they call clavum pangere, and which was used in the Times of primitive Ignorance, to reckon the Number of the Years, and in the Times of latter Superstition, for the averting or driving away Pestilences and Seditions) and the like; yet the true and proper Dictator was he, who had been invested with this Honour upon the Occasion of dangerous War, Sedition, or any such Emergency as required a sudden and absolute Command (c). And therefore he was not chosen with the usual Formalities, but only named in the Night, viva voce, by the Consul (d), and confirmed by the Divination from Birds (e). The Time assigned for the Duration of the Office was never lengthened, except out of mere Necessity : And as for the perpetual Dictatorships of Sylla and Julius Cæsar, they are confessed to have been notorious Violations of the Laws of their Country. There were two other Confinements which the Dictator was obliged to observe. First, he was never to stir out of Italy, for Fear he should take Advantage of the Distance of the Place to attempt any Thing against the common Liberty (a). Besides this, he was always to march on Foot ; only upon Account of a tedious or sudden Expedition, he formally asked Leave of the People to ride (b). But setting aside these Restraints, his Power was most absolute. He might proclaim War, levy Forces, lead them out, or disband them, without any Consultation had with the Senate : He could punish as he pleased ; and from his Judgement lay no Appeal (c) ; at least not 'till in latter Times. To make the Authority of his Charge more awful, he had always twenty-four Bundles of Rods, and as many Axes, carried before him in publick, if we will believe Plutarch (d) and Polybius (e). Though Livy attributes the first Rite of this Custom to Sylla (f). Nor was he only invested with the joint Authority of both the Consuls ; (whence the Græcians call'd him Διπύρατος, or Double Consul;) but during his Administration, all other Magistrates ceased, except the Tribunes, and left the whole Government in his Hands (g).

This Office had the Reputation to be the only Safeguard of the Commonwealth in Times of Danger, four hundred Years together ; 'till Sylla and Cæsar having converted it into a Tyranny and rendered the very Name odious : Upon the Murther of the latter, a Decree pass'd in the Senate, to forbid the Use of it upon any Account whatsoever for the future (h).

The first Thing the Dictator did, was to chuse a Magister Equitum, or Master of the Horse, (he himself being in ancient Times, by a more general Name, termed Magister Populi) who was to be his Lieutenant General of the Army, but could do nothing without his express Order ; yet, in the War with Hannibal, when the slow Proceedings of Fabius Maximus created a Suspicion in the Commons, they voted that Minutius, his Master of the Horse, should have an equal Authority with Fabius himself, and be, as it were, another Dictator (i). The like was afterwards practis'd in the same War upon the Defeat at Canne, when the Dictator, M. Junius, being with the Army, Fabius

Butco was chose a second Dictator at Rome, to create new Senators for the supplying of their Places who had been killed in the Battle: Though as soon as ever the Ceremony was over, he immediately laid down the Command, and acted as a private Person (a).

There was another Expedient used in Cases of extreme Emergency, much like this Custom of creating a Dictator; and that was, to invest the Consuls, sometimes the other chief Magistrates, as the Praetors, Tribunes, &c. with an absolute and uncontrollable Power. This was performed by that short yet full Decree of Senate, Dent operam Consules, &c. ne quid Detrimenti capiat Respublica. Let the Consuls, &c. take Care that the Commonwealth suffer no Damage.

C H A P VI.

Of the P R Æ T O R S.

THE Original of this Office, instituted in the Year of the City 389, is owing to two Occasions: Partly because the Consuls being very often wholly taken up with foreign Wars, found the Want of some Person to administer Justice in the City; and partly because the Nobility, having lost their Appropriation of the Consulship, were ambitious of procuring to themselves some new Honour in its Room (a). At the first, only one was created, taking his Name à prætoris; and for the same Reasons most of the old Latins called their Commanders Prætores: And the Consuls are supposed to have used that Title at their first Institution. A. U. C. 501 another Prætor was added; and then one of them applied himself wholly to the preserving of Justice among the Citizens, with the Name of Prætor Urbanus, while the other appointed Judges in all Matters relating to Foreigners. But upon the Taking in of Sicily and Sardinia, A. U. C. 520, two more Prætors were created to assist the Consuls in the Government of the Provinces; and as many more upon the entire Conquest of Spain, A. U. C. 551. Sylla increased the Number to eight; Julius Caesar first to ten, and then to sixteen; the second Triumviri, after an extravagant Manner, to sixty four.

After this, sometimes we meet with twelve Prætors, sometimes sixteen or eighteen; but, in the Declension of the Empire, they fell as low again as three.

When the Number of the Prætors was thus increased, and the Questiones, or Enquirers into Crimes, made perpetual, and not committed to Officers chosen upon such Occasions, the Prætor Urbanus (and, as Lipsius thinks, the Prætor Peregrinus) undertook the Cognizance of private Causes, and the other Prætors that of Crimes. The latter therefore were sometimes called Quæstores, quia quærebant de Crimine; the first barely jus dicebat. Here we must observe the Difference between jus dicere and judicare; the former relates to the Prætor, and signifies no more than the allowing an Action, and granting Judices for determining the Controversy; the other is the proper Officer of the Judices allowed by the Prætor, and denotes the actual hearing and deciding of a Cause (a).

Of the CENSORS.

THE Census, or Survey of the Roman Citizens and their Estates (from Censeo to rate or value) was introduced by Servius Tullius, the sixth King, but without the Assignment of any particular Officer to manage it: And therefore he took the Trouble upon himself, and made it a Part of the regal Duty. Upon the Expulsion of the Tarquins, the Business fell to the Consuls, and continued in their Care, 'till their Dominions grew so large as to give them no Leisure for its Performance. Upon this Account, it was wholly omitted seventeen Years together, 'till A. U. C. 311. when they found the Necessity of a new Magistracy for that Employment, and thereupon created two Censors: Their Office was to continue five Years, because, every fifth Year, the general Survey of the People used to be performed: But when they grew to be the most considerable Persons in the State, for fear they should abuse their Authority, A. U. C. 420. a

Law

Law passed, by which their Place was confined to a Year and a half; and therefore, for the future, though they were elected every five Years, yet they continued to hold the Honour no longer than the Time prefixed by that Law.

After the second Punick War, they were always created out of such Persons as had been Consuls, though it sometimes happened otherwise before. Their Station was reckoned more honourable than the Consulship, though their Authority, in Matters of State, was not so considerable. And the Badges of the two Officers were the same, only that the Censors were not allowed the Lictors to walk before them, as the Consuls had.

Lipsius divides the Duty of the Censors into two Heads; the Survey of the People, and the Censure of Manners. As to the former, they took an exact Account of the Estates and Goods of every Person, and accordingly divided the People into their proper Classes and Centuries. Besides this, they took Care of the publick Taxes, and made Laws in Reference to them. They were Inspectors of the publick Buildings and Ways, and defrayed the Charges of such Sacrifices as were made upon the common Account.

With Respect to the latter Part of their Office, they had the Power to punish an Immorality in any Person, of what Order soever. The Senators they might expel the House, which was done by omitting such a Person when they called over the Names. The Equites they punished by taking away the Horse allowed them at the publick Charge. The Commons they might either remove from a higher Tribe to a less honourable; or quite disable them to give their Votes in the Assemblies; or set a Fine upon them to be paid to the Treasury. And sometimes when a Senator, or Eques, had been guilty of any notorious Irregularity, he suffered two of these Punishments, or all three at once.

*In Censum Tabulus referre,

The greatest Part of the Censor's publick Business was performed every fifth Year, when, after the Survey of the People, and Inquisition into their Manners, taken anciently in the Forum, and afterwards in the Villa publica, the Censors made a solemn Lustration, or expiatory Sacrifice, in the Name of all the People. The Sacrifice consisted of a Sow, a Sheep, and a Bull, whence it took the Name of Suovetaurilia. The Ceremony of performing it they called Lustrum condere; and upon this Account the Space of five Years came to be signified by the Word Lustrum.

Sylla the Dictator, as Tacitus informs us (a), created twenty Quæstors to fill up the Senate, and Dio (b) mentions the creating of forty by Julius Cæsar upon the same Design.

The chief Offices of the Quæstors were the receiving, lodging, and carrying out Ambassadors, and the keeping the Decrees of the Senate appointed them by Augustus (c), which before had been under the Care of the Ædiles and Tribunes.

From hence came the two Offices of Quæstor Principis, or Augusti, called sometimes Candidatus Principis, described by Briffonius (d), and resembling the Office of our Secretary of State, and Quæstor Palatii, instituted by Constantine the Great, answering in most Respects to the Place of the Lord Chancellor amongst us. Perhaps we ought not here to make a Distinction of Offices; the Quæstores Candidati being honoured by Constantine with the new Title of Quæstores Palatii, and admitted to greater Trust, and more important Business (e).

The Quæstorship was the first Office any Person could bear in the Commonwealth, and might be undertaken at the Age of twenty-four or twenty-five Years.

Of the Tribunes of the People.

THIS Office owes its Original to a Quarrel between the Nobility and Commons, about A. U. C. 260; when the latter making a Defection, could not be reduced into Order, till they had obtained the Privilege of chusing some Magistrates out of their own Body, for the Defence of their Liberties, and to interpose in all Grievances and Impositions offered by their Superiors (a). At first only two were elected; but three more were quickly added; and about A. U. C. 297, the Number was made up ten, which continued ever after.

Their Authority was extraordinary: For, though at first they pretended only to be a Sort of Protectors of the Commons, and Redressers of publick Grievances, yet afterwards they usurped the Power of doing almost whatever they pleased, having the whole Populacy to back and secure them: And therefore they assembled the People, preferred Laws, made Decrees, and executed them upon the Magistrates themselves; and sometimes commanded the very Consuls to be carried to Prison: And were, without Question, the Authors of far greater Animositities between the Nobles and Commons, than they were at first created to appease.

(a) Dionys. lib. 9. Liv. lib. 2, &c.

That which gained them the greatest Security, was their Repute of being Sacro-sancti, which they confirmed by a Law: So that it was reckoned the highest Act of Impiety to offer them the least Injury, or so much as to interrupt them when they were speaking. Their interposing in Matters determined by the Senate or other Magistrates, was called Intercessio, and was performed by standing up, and pronouncing only one Word, VETO.

As for the Ensigns of their Office, they had no Prætexta, Lictors, nor Curule Chair; and only a Sort of Beadle, whom they called Viator, went before them.

Sylla the Dictator was the first who dared to put a Stop to the Inroachments of the Tribunes; but they soon recovered their old Power again, 'till the Time of the Emperors, who left them very little but the Name and Shadow of Magistrates: This they effected as by several Means, so particularly by obliging the People to confer the same Power and Authority on themselves: Whence they were said to be Tribunitia Potestate donati: For they could not be directly Tribuni, unless their Family had been Plebeian.

Of the ÆDILES.

THE Commons had no sooner prevailed with the Senate to confirm the Office of Tribunes, but they obtained further the Privilege to chuse yearly, out of their own Body, two more Officers, to assist those Magistrates in the Discharge of some particular Services (a), the chief of which was the Care of publick Edifices, whence they borrowed their Name. Rosinus, for Distinction Sake, calls them Ædiles Plebis. Besides the Duty mentioned above, they had several other Employments of lesser Note; as to attend on the Tribunes of the People, and to judge some inferior Causes by their Deputation, to rectify the Weights and Measures, prohibit unlawful Games, and the like.

A. U. C. 389, two more Ædiles were elected out of the Nobility, to inspect the publick Games (a). They were called Ædiles Curules, because they had the Honour of using the Sella Curulis; the Name of which is generally derived à curru (b), because they sat upon it as they rode in their Chariots; but Lipfius fancies it owes its Name, as well as its Invention, to the Curetes, a People of the Sabines.

The Curules Ædiles, besides their proper Office, were to take Care of the Building and Reparation of Temples, Theatres, Baths, and other noble Structures; and were appointed Judges in all Cases relating to the selling or exchanging of Estates.

Julius Cæsar, A. U. C. 710, added two more Ædiles out of the Nobility, with the Title of Ædiles Cereales, from Ceres, because their Business was to inspect the publick Stores of Corn and other Provisions; to supervise all the Commodities exposed in the Markets, and to punish Delinquents in all Matters concerning buying and selling (c).

CHAP. XI.

Of the DECEMVIRI.

ABOUT the Year of Rome 291, the People thinking themselves highly wronged, that though they had freed themselves from the Government of the Kings, yet still the whole Decision of Equity and Justice should lie in the Breast of the supreme Magistrates, without any written Statute to direct them, proposed to the Senate by their Tribunes, that standing Laws might be made, which the City should use for ever. The Business hung in Suspense several Years; at last it was concluded to send Ambassadors to Athens, and other Græcian Cities, to make Collections out of the best of their Constitutions, for the Service of their Country in the new Design. Upon the Return of the Commissioners, the Tribunes claiming the Promise of the Senate, to allow them a new Magistracy for the putting the Project in Execution, it was agreed, that ten Men out of the chief Senators should be elected: That their Power should be equal to that of the Kings, or Consuls, for a whole Year: And that, in the mean Time, all other Offices should cease. The Decemviri having now taken the Government upon them, agreed that only one of them should at any Time enjoy the Fasces and other Consular Ornaments, should assemble the Senate, confirm Decrees, and act in all Respects as supreme Magistrate. To this Honour they were to succeed by Turns, 'till the Year was out; and the Rest were obliged to differ very little in their Habits from private Persons, to give the People the less Suspicion of Tyranny and absolute Government.

At length, having drawn up a Model out of such Laws as had been brought from Greece, and the Customs of their own Country, they exposed it to the publick View in ten Tables, Liberty being given for any Person to make Exceptions. Upon the general Approbation of the Citizens, a Decree passed for the Ratification of the new Laws, which was performed in the Presence of the Priests and Augurs, in a most solemn and religious Manner.

This Year being expired, a farther Continuance of this Office was voted necessary, because something seemed yet to be wanting for the perfecting of the Design. The Decemviri who had procured themselves the Honour in the new Election, quickly abused their Authority; and, under Pretence of reforming the Commonwealth, showed themselves the greatest Violators of Justice and Honesty. Two more Tables, indeed, they added to the first, and so seemed to have answered the Intent of their Institution: Yet they not only kept their Office the remaining Part of that Year, but usurped it again the next, without any Regard to the Approbation of the Senate or People. And though there was some Stir made in the City for putting a Stop to their Tyranny; yet they maintained their absolute Power, 'till an Action of their chief Leader Appius gave a final Ruin to their Authority: For he, falling desperately in Love with Virginia, the Daughter of a Plæbian, and prosecuting his Passion by such unlawful Means, as to cause the killing of her by her own Father, (the Story of which is told at large by Livy) gave an Occasion of a Mutiny in the Army, and a general Dislike through the whole City; so that it was agreed in the Senate, to let the same Form of Government return, which was in Force at the Creation of the Decemviri (a).

Tribuni Militum Consulari Potestate.

UPON the Conclusion of the Decemvirate, the first Consuls that were elected, appearing highly inclined to favour the Commons, gave them such an Opportunity of getting a Head in the State, that, within three Years afterwards, they had the Confidence to petition for the Privilege of being made capable of the Consulship, which had been hitherto denied them. The dissent of the Patricians violently opposed their Request, as a fair Means to ruin their Honour and Authority, and to bring all Persons, of whatever Quality, upon the same Level. But a War casually breaking out at the same Time in the Confederate Countries, which the Romans were obliged to assist, the Consuls, by Reason of the Dissentions upon this Account in the City, could not, with all their Diligence, procure any Levies to be made, because the Tribunes of the Commons opposed all their Orders, and would let no Soldiers be listed, 'till their Petition had been canvassed in the Senate. In this Exigency, the Fathers were called together; and, after the Business had been a long Time debated with great Heat and Tumult, at last pitched upon this Expedient: That three Magistrates should be elected out of each Order, who being invested with the whole Consular Power, at the End of the Year it should be in the Liberty of the Senate and People to have that Office or Consuls for the following Year.

Both Parties readily embraced this Proposal, and accordingly proceeded to an Election; where, though the whole Design of this Sur had been purely to increase the Honour of the Commons, yet when the Matter came to be put to the Vote, they chose none of that Order to the new Magistracy, but conferred the Honour on three of the most eminent Patricians, with the Title of Tribuni Militum Consulari Potestate, about A. U. C. 310.

The first Tribunes, having held their Dignity no longer than seventy Days, were obliged to quit it, by Reason that the Augurs had discovered some Flaw in their Election; and so the Government returned to its former Course, the Supreme Command resting in the Hands of the Consuls (a). Afterwards they were some Years chose, and some Years passed by, having risen from three to six, and afterwards to eight, and the Plebeians being admitted to a Share in the Honour; 'till, about A. U. C. 388, when they were entirely laid aside.

Civil Officers of less Note, or of less frequent Occurrence in Authors, together with the publick Servants.

THERE are several Officers behind, who deserve little more than to be named; some by Reason of their low Station in the Commonwealth, others because they are very seldom mentioned in our ordinary Classicks. Among whom we may take Notice of these that follow:

Interrex, the supreme Magistrate, who governed between the Death of one King, and the Election of another. This Office was taken by Turns by the Senators, continuing in the Hands of every Man five Days (a), or, if we may believe Plutarch (b), only twelve Hours at a Time. We sometimes meet with an Interrex under the Consular Government, created to hold Assemblies, when the ordinary Magistrates were either absent, or disabled to act by Reason of their undue Election.

Tribunus, or Præfectus Celerum; the Captain of Romulus's Life Guard, which consisted of three hundred of the stoutest young Men, and of the best Families in the City, under the Names of Celeres, or Light-Horse. After the Expulsion of the Kings, the Magister Equitum held the same Place and Command under the Dictators, and the Præfectus Prætorio under the Emperors.

Præfectus Urbis; a Sort of Mayor of the City, created by Augustus, by the Advice of his Favourite *Mæcenæ*s, upon whom at first he conferred the new Honour (c). He was to precede all other City Magistrates, having Power to receive Appeals from the interior Courts, and to decide almost all Causes within the

(a) Dionys. l. 2. Liv. l. 2. (b) In Numa. (c) Dio, l. 52. Tacit. Anal. 4. 3. Limits

Limits of Rome, or a hundred Miles round. Before this there was sometimes a Præfektus Urbis created, when the Kings, or greater Officers, were absent from the City, to administer Justice in their Room (a).

Præfektus Aerarii: An Officer chose out of such Persons as had discharged the Office of Prætor, by Augustus, to supervise and regulate the publick Fund, which he raised for the Maintenance of the Army (b). This Project was revised by several of his Successors.

Præfektus Prætorio: Created by the same Emperor, to command the Prætorian Cohorts, or his Life-Guard, who borrowed their Name from the Prætorium, or General's Tent, all Commanders in Chief being anciently stiled Prætores. His Office answered exactly to that of the Magister Equitum under the old Dictators; only his Authority was of greater Extent, being generally the highest Person in Favour with the Army. And therefore when the Soldiers once came to make their own Emperors, the Person they commonly pitched upon was the Præfektus Prætorio.

Præfektus Frumenti and Præfektus Vigilium: Both owing their Institution to the same Augustus. The first was to inspect and regulate the Distribution of Corn, which used to be often made among the common People. The other commanded in Chief all the Soldiers appointed for a constant Watch to the City, being a Cohort to every two Regions. His Business was to take Cognizance of Thieves, Incendiaries, idle Vagrants, and the like; and had the Power to punish all petty Misdemeanors, which were thought too trivial to come under the Care of the Præfektus Urbis.

In many of these inferior Magistracies, several Persons were joined in Commission together; and then they took their Name from the Number of Men that composed them. Of this Sort we meet with the Triumviri, or Tresviri Capiales: The Keepers of the publick Gaol; they had the Power to punish Malefactors, like our Masters of the Houses of Correction, for which Service they kept eight Lictors under them; as may be gathered from Plautus:

Quid faciam nunc si Tresviri me in carcerem compegerint?

Inde cras e promptuariâ cellâ depromar ad flagrum:

Ita quasi incudem me miserum octo homines validi cædent (c).

Triumviri Nocturni: Mentioned by Livy (d) and Tacitus (e), instituted for the Prevention of Fires in the Night.

Triumviri Monetales: The Masters of the Mint; sometimes their Name was wrote Triumviri A. A. Æ. F. F. standing for Auro, Argentis, Ære, Flando, Feriendo.

Quatuor Viri Viarum curandarum: Persons deputed by the Censor to supervise the publick Ways.

Centumviri, and Decemviri Litibus judicandis: The first were a Body of Men chose, three out of every Tribe, for the judging of such Matters as the Prætors committed to their Decision; which are reckoned up by Cicero in his first Book de Oratore. The Decemviri seem to have been the principal Members of the Centumvirate, and to have presided under the Prætor in the Judicia Centumviralia. These were some of the first Steps to Preferment, for Persons of Parts and Industry; as was also the Vigintiviratus mentioned by Cicero, Tacitus, and Dio; which, perhaps was no more than a select Part of the Centumviri. The proper Sign of Authority, when these Judges acted, was the setting up a Spear in the Forum:

Seu trepidos ad jura decem citat hasta virorum,

Seu firmare jubet centeno iudice causam.

Lucan.

The learned Grævius observes, that a Spear was the common Badge and Ensign of Power among the Ancients, and therefore given to the Gods in their Statues, and to Kings and Princes till it was succeeded by the Sceptre (a). A Spear was likewise set up at the Collections of the Taxes by the Censors; and at all Auctionis, publick or private, to signify that they were done by a lawful Commission: Whence the Phrase, Sub hasta vendi.

There are other Officers of as little Note behind, who had no fixed Authority, but were constituted upon some particular Occasions: Such as the Duumviri Perduellionis, sive Capitales, Officers created for the Judging of Traitors. They were first introduced by Tullius Hostilius; continued as often as Necessity required, under the Rest of the Kings, and sometimes under the Consular Government, at its first Institution. But after they had been laid down many Years, as unnecessary, Cicero, in the latter Times of their Commonwealth, complains of their Revival by Laticens, Tribune of the Commons (b).

Quæstores, or Quæstores Parricidii vel Rerum capitalium; Magistrates chosen by the People to give Judgment in capital Causes,

(a) Præf. II. Tom. Theſaur. Antiq. Rom. Perduellionis &c.

(b) Cicero Orat. pro C. Rabirio

after the Consuls were denied that Privilege, and before the Quæstiones were made perpetual.

The publick Servants of the Magistrates had the common Name of Apparitores; from the Word Appareo, because they always stood to execute their Masters Orders. Of these, the most remarkable were the Scribæ, a Sort of publick Notaries, who took an Account of all the Proceedings of the Courts: In some Measure too they answered to our Attornies, inasmuch as they drew up the Papers and Writings which were produced before the Judges; Notarius and Aluarius signifying much the same Office.

Accensi and Præcones, the publick Criers, who were to call Witnesses, signify the Adjournment of the Court, and the like. The former had the Name from Accio, and the other from Præcio. The Præcones seem to have had more Business assigned them than the Accensi; as the proclaiming Things in the Street; the assisting at publick Sales, to declare how much every one bids; whereas the Accensi more nearly attended on the Magistrates: And, at the Bench of Justice, gave Notice, every three Hours, what it was o'Clock.

Lictores, the Serjeants, or Beadles, who carried the Fasces before the supreme Magistrates; as the Interreges, Dictators, Consuls and Prætors. Besides this, they were the publick Executioners in scourging and beheading.

The Lictors were taken out of the common People, whereas the Accensi generally belonged to the Body of the Libertini, and sometimes to that of the Liberti (a).

The Viatores were little different from the former, only that they went before the Officers of less Dignity, and particularly before the Tribunes of the Commons.

In ancient Times they were used to call the plain Senators out of the Country, whence Tully in his Cato Major derives their Name: as if they were to ply about the Roads and Parks, and to pick up an Assembly of rural Fathers, who perhaps were then employed in driving or keeping their own Sheep.

We must not forget the Carnifex, or common Hangman, whose Business lay only in Crucifixions. Cicero has a very good Observation concerning him: That by Reason of the Odiousness of his Office, he was particularly forbid by the Laws to have his Dwelling-house within the City (b).

C H A P. XIV.

Of the Provincial Magistrates; and first of the PROCONSULS.

THE Chief of the Provincial Officers were the Proconsuls. Whether the Word ought to be written Proconsul, and declined, or Proconsule, and undeclined.

Grammatici certant, & adhuc sub judice lis est.

We may divide these Magistrates into four Sorts ;

First, Such as being Consuls, had their Office prolonged beyond the Time prescribed by Law.

Secondly, Such as were invested with this Honour, either for the Government of the Provinces, or the Command in War, who before were only in a private Station.

Thirdly, Such as immediately upon the Expiration of their Consulship went Proconsuls into the Provinces, in the Time of the Commonwealth.

Fourthly, Such Governors as in the Times of the Empire, were sent into those Provinces which fell to the Share of the People.

Proconsuls of the two former Sorts we meet with very rarely, only Livy gives us an Example of each (a.)

The third Kind more properly enjoyed the Name and Dignity, and therefore deserve to be described at large, with Reference to their Creation, Administration, and Return from their Command.

They were not appointed by the People, but when at the Comitia Centuriata new Consuls were designed for the following Year; one of the present Consuls proposed to the Senate what Province they would declare Consular, and what Prætorian, to be divided among the designed Consuls and Prætors. According to their Determination, the designed Consuls, or Consuls electi, presently agreed what Provinces to enter upon at the Expiration of their Office in the City, the Business being generally decided by casting Lots.

(a) Liv. lib. 8. cap. 26.

Afterwards,

Afterwards, in the Time of their Consulship, they formally got Leave of the People to undertake the military Command, which could not be otherwise obtained. Besides this, they procured a Decree of the Senate, to determine the Extent of their Provinces, the Number of their Forces, the Pay that should be allowed them, with all other Necessaries for their Journey and Settlement.

By the passing of this Decree, they were said Ornari Provincia; and Cicero uses in the same Sense Ornari Apparitoribus, Scribis, &c. who made a Part of the Proconsul's Retinue.

Nothing now remained, but at the End of the Year to set forward for their new Government. But we must observe that though the Senate had given them Leave to depart, yet the Tribunes of the Commons had Power to stop their Journey; and therefore because Crassus went Proconsul into Parthia, contrary to the express Order of the Tribune, he was generally believed to have lost the Roman Army, and his own Life, as a Judgement on him for despising the Authority of that Officer, whom they always counted Sacro-sanctus.

At their first Entrance on their Province, they spent some Time in Conference with their immediate Predecessors, to be informed of the State of Things, though their Administration began the very Day of their Arrival.

Their Authority, both civil and military, was very extraordinary. The Winter they generally spent in the Execution of the first, and the Summer in the Discharge of the latter.

They decided Cases of Equity and Justice, either privately in their Prætorium, or Palace; where they received Petitioners, heard Complaints, granted Writs, under their Seals, and the like; or else publicly in the Common-Hall, with the usual Ceremonies and Formalities observed in Courts of Judicature, the Processes being in all Respects the same as those at Rome.

Besides this, by Virtue of their Edicts, they had the Power of ordering all Things relating to the Tribunes, Taxes, Contributions, and Provisions of Corn and Money, and whatever else belonged to the chief Administration of Affairs.

Their Return from the Command was very remarkable: They either met their Successor at his Arrival, and immediately delivered into his Hands the Charge of the Army, being obliged to leave the Province in thirty Days; or else they came away beforehand, and left a Deputy in their Room to perform the Solemnity of a Resignation, having first made up their Accounts and left them in Writing in the two chief Cities of their several Provinces.

Upon

Upon their Arrival at Rome, if they had no Thoughts of a Triumph, they presently dismissed their Train, and entered the City as private Persons. If they aspired to that Honour, they still retained the Fasces, and other Proconsular Ornaments, and gave the Senate (assembled for that Purpose in the Temple of Bellona) a Relation of their Actions and Exploits, and petitioned for a Triumph. But in both Cases they were obliged to give in their Accounts into the publick Treasury within thirty Days.

Though the Proconsuls ordered Matters as they pleased during their Honour; yet at their Return, a very strict Account was made into the whole Course of their Government; and upon the Discovery of any ill Dealing, it was usual to prefer Bills against them, and bring them to a formal Trial. The Crimes most commonly objected against them were Crimen Peculatus; relating to the ill Use of the publick Money, and the Deficiency of their Accompts; Majestatis, of Treachery and Perfidiousness against the Commonwealth; or Repetundarum, of Oppression or Extortion exercised upon the Inhabitants of the Provinces, whom, as their Allies and Confederates, the Romans were obliged to patronize and defend.

Augustus, when, at the Desire of the Senate and People, he assumed the sole Government of the Empire, among other Constitutions at the Beginning of his Reign, divided the Provinces into two Parts, one of which he gave wholly over to the People; and reserved the other for himself. After which Time only the Governors sent into the first Division bore the Name of Proconsuls; though they were denied the whole military Power, and so fell short of the old Proconsuls.

To these four Sorts of Proconsuls, we may add two more from Alexander of Naples.

First, Such as the Senate created Proconsuls without a Provincia, purely for the Command of the Army, and the Care of the military Discipline: And, Secondly, Such designed Consuls as entered on their Proconsular Office, before they were admitted to the Consulship.

C H A P. XV.

Of the Provincial Prætors and Proprætors; of the Legati, Quæstors, and Proquæstors.

IN the first Times of the Commonwealth, the Provinces were governed by Prætors, and as the Dominions of the State were enlarged, the Number of those Magistrates was accordingly increased; yet even in those Times, if they continued in the Command of the Province beyond the Time prefixed for the Continuance of their Prætorship, they took upon them the Name of Proprætors, though they still kept the same Authority as before.

About A. U. C. 604, the designed Prætors began to divide the Prætorium, or lesser Provinces, by Lot, in the same Manner as the Consuls did the Consular; and when at the End of the Year they repaired to their respective Governments, assumed the Title of Proprætors. As their Creation was the same as that of the Proconsuls, so their Entrance upon their Office, and the whole Course of their Administration, was exactly answerable to theirs; only that they were allowed but six Lictors with an equal Number of Fasces, whereas the Proconsuls had twelve of each.

Now though before the Time of Augustus, the Proprætors, by Reason of their presiding over the Provinces of lesser Note and Importance, were always reckoned inferior to the Proconsuls; yet upon his Division of the Provinces, the Governors of those which fell to his Share, bearing the Name of Proprætors, got the Preference of the Proconsuls, in Respect to Power and Authority; being invested with the military Command, and continuing in their Office as long as the Emperor pleased.

The chief Assistants of the Proconsuls and the Proprætors, were the Legati and the Provincial Quæstors. The former being different in Number, according to the Quality of the Governor whom they accompanied, served for the judging of inferior Causes, and the Management of all smaller Concerns, remitting every Thing of Moment to the Care of the Governor or President. But though instituted at first for Counsel only (like the Deputies of the States attending the Dutch Armies) yet they were afterwards admitted to command; and therefore will be described as General Officers, when we come to speak of military Affairs (a)

(a) Lib. 4. cap. 8.

Besides the Legati, there went with every Proconsul, or Prætor, one Quæstor or more, whose whole Business was concerned in managing the publick Accounts, taking Care of the Supplies of Money, Corn, and other Necessaries and Conveniencies for the Maintenance of the Roman Army.

We seldom meet with Proquæstors in Authors, they being only such as performed the Office of Quæstor in the Provinces, without the Deputation from the Senate, which was requisite to the Constitution of the proper Quæstors. This happened either when a Quæstor died in his Office, or went to Rome without being succeeded by another Quæstor: For in both these Cases, the Governor of the Province appointed another in his Room, to discharge the same Duties under the Name of Proquæstor.

Of the like Nature with the Quæstor were the Procuratores Cæsaris, often mentioned by Tacitus and Suetonius; Officers sent by the Emperors into every Province, to receive and regulate the publick Revenue, and to dispose of it at the Emperor's Command.

Such a Magistrate was Pontius Pilate in Judea; and though the judging of capital Causes did not properly belong to his Office, yet because the Jews were always looked upon as a rebellious Nation, and apt to revolt on the least Occasion, and because the President of Syria was forced to attend on other Parts of his Province; therefore for the better keeping the Jews in Order, the Procurator of Judea was invested with all the Authority proper to the Proconsul, even with the Power of Life and Death, as the learned Bishop Pearson observes (a).

THE Comitia, according to Sigonius's Definition, were General Assemblies of the People, lawfully called by some Magistrates for the Enjoiment or Prohibition of any Thing by their Votes (a).

The proper Comitia were of three Sorts; Curiata, Centuriata, and Tributa; with Reference to the three grand Divisions of the City and People into Curiæ, Centuries and Tribes: For by

(a) Sigon. de el. l. g. Jus. Civ. Romanorum, lib. 1. cap. 17.

Comitia Calata, which we sometimes meet with in Authors, in elder Times were meant all the Comitia in general; the Word Calata, from καλέω, or Calo, being their common Epithet; tho' it was at last restrained to two Sorts of Assemblies, those for the Creation of Priests, and those for the Inspection and Regulation of last Wills and Testaments (a).

The Comitia Curiata owe their Original to the Division which Romulus made of the People into thirty Curia; ten being contained under every Tribe. They answered, in most Respects, to the Parishes in our Cities, being not only separated by proper Bounds and Limits, but distinguished too by their different Places set apart for the Celebration of Divine Service, which was performed by particular Priests (one to every Curia) with the Name of Curiones.

Dionysius Halicarnassus expressly affirms, that each Curia was again subdivided into Decuria, and these lesser Bodies governed by Decuriones. And, the upon Strength of this Authority, most Compilers of the Roman Customs give the same Account without any Scruple. But it is the Opinion of the learned Grævius (b), that since Dionysius is not seconded in this Part of his Relation by an ancient Writer, we ought to think it was a Mistake in that great Man; and that, by Forgetfulness, he attributed such a Division to the Curia, as belonged properly to the Turma in the Army.

Before the Institution of the Comitia Centuriata, all the grand Concerns of the State were transacted in the Assembly of the Curia; as, the Election of Kings and other chief Officers, the making and abrogating of Laws, and the judging of capital Causes. After the Expulsion of the Kings, when the Commons had obtained the Privilege to have Tribunes and Ædiles, they elected them for some Time at these Assemblies: But that Ceremony being at length transferred to the Comitia Tributa, the Curia were never convened to give their Votes, except now and then upon Account of making some particular Law relating to Adoptions, Wills, and Testaments, or the Creation of Officers for an Expedition; or for the electing of some of the Priests, as the Flamines, and the Curio Maximus, or Superintendent of the Curiones, who themselves were chose by every particular Curia.

The Power of calling these Assemblies belonged at first only to the Kings; but, upon the Establishment of the Democracy, the same Privilege was allowed to most of the chief Magistrates, and sometimes to the Pontifices.

The Persons who had the Liberty of voting here, were such Roman Citizens as belonged to the Curia; or such as actually lived in the City, and conformed to the Customs and Rites of their proper Curia; all those being excluded who dwelt without the Bounds of the City, and retaining the Ceremonies of their own Country, though they had been honoured with the Jus Civitatis, or admitted free Citizens of Rome (a).

The Place where the Curia met was the Comitium, a Part of the Forum described before (b).

No set Time was allotted for the holding of these or any of the other Comitia, but only as Business required.

The People being met together, and confirmed by the Report of good Omens from the Augurs (which was necessary in all the Assemblies) the Rogatio, or Business to be proposed to them, was publicly read. After this, if none of the Magistrates interposed, upon the order of him that presided in the Comitia, the People divided into their proper Curia, and consulted of the Matter; and then the Curia being called out, as it happened by Lot, gave their Votes, Man by Man, in ancient Tabella. Times vivæ voce, and afterwards by Tablets; the most Votes in every Curia going for the Voice of the whole Curia, and the most Curia for the general Consent of the People (c).

In the Time of Cicero, the Comitia Curiata were so much out of Fashion, that they were formed only by thirty Lictors representing the thirty Curia; whence in his second Oration against Rullus, he calls them Comitia adumbrata.

The Comitia Centuriata were instituted by Servius Tullius; who obliging every one to give a true Account of what they were worth, according to those Accounts divided the People into six Ranks, or Classes, which he subdivided into 193 Centuries. The first Classes, containing the Equites and richest Citizens, consisted of ninety-eight Centuries. The second, taking in the Tradesmen and Mechanicks, made up two and twenty Centuries. The third, the same Number. The fourth, twenty. The fifth, thirty. And the last, filled up with the poorer Sort, had but one Century (d).

(a) Strabo, lib. 7. cap. 1. (b) See Part II. Book I. cap. 5. (c) Rubens, lib. 7. cap. 7. (d) See Dionys. lib. 4.

And this, though it had the same Name with the rest, was seldom regarded, or allowed by any Power in publick Matters. Hence it is a common Thing with the Roman Authors, when they speak of the Classes, to reckon no more than five, the sixth not being worth their Notice. This last Classis was divided into two Parts, or Orders, the Proletarii, and the Capite Censii. The former, as their Name implies, were designed purely to stock the Commonwealth with Men, since they could supply it with so little Money. And the latter, who paid the lowest Tax of all, were rather counted and marshalled by their Heads, than their Estates (a).

Persons of the first Rank, by Reason of their Pre-eminence, had the Name of Classici; whence came the Phrase of Classici Authores, for the most approved Writers. All others, of what Classis soever, were said to be infra Classen (b).

The Assembly of the People by Centuries was held for the electing of Consuls, Censors, and Prætors; as also for the judging of Persons accused of what they called Crimen Perduellionis, or Actions by which the Parry had showed himself an Enemy to the State; and for the Confirmation of all such Laws as were proposed by the chief Magistrates, and which had the Privilege of calling these Assemblies.

The Place appointed for their Meeting was the Campus Martius; because in the primitive Times of the Commonwealth, when they were under continual Apprehensions of Enemies, the People, to prevent any sudden Assault, went armed, in martial Order, to hold these Assemblies; and were for that Reason forbid by the Laws to meet in the City, because an Army was upon no Account to be marshalled within the Walls: Yet, in latter Ages, it was thought sufficient to place a Body of Soldiers as a Guard in the Faniculum, where an Imperial Standard was erected, the taking down of which denoted the Conclusion of the Comitia.

Though the Time of these Comitia for other Matters was undetermined, yet the Magistrates, after the Year of the City 601, when they began to enter on their Place on the Kalends of January, were constantly designed about the End of July, and the Beginning of August.

All the Time between their Election and Confirmation, they continued as private Persons, that Inquisition might be made into the Election, and the other Candidates might have Time to enter Objections, if they met with any Suspicion of foul Dealing.

(a) A. Gell. lib. 7. cap. 13.

(b) A. Gell. lib. 7. 16. cap. 10.

Yet, at the Election of the Censors, this Custom did not hold; but as soon as they were pronounced elected, they were immediately invested with the Honour (a)

By the Institution of these Comitia, Servius Tullius secretly conveyed the whole Power from the Commons: For the Centuries of the first and richest Class being called out first, who were three more in Number than all the Rest put together, if they all agreed, as they generally did, the Business was already decided, and the other Classes were needless and insignificant. However, the three last scarce ever came to vote (b).

The Commons, in the Time of the free State, to rectify this Disadvantage, obtained, that before they proceeded to voting any Matter at these Comitia, that Century should give their Suffrages first, upon whom it fell by Lot, with the Name of Centuria Prærogativa; the Rest being to follow according to the Order of their Classes. After the Constitution of the five and thirty Tribes into which the Classes and their Centuries were divided, in the first Place the Tribes cast Lots, which should be the Prærogative Tribe; and then the Centuries of the Tribe, for the Honour of being the Prærogative Century. All the other Tribes and Centuries had the Appellation of Jure vocatæ, because they were called out according to their proper Places.

The Prærogative Century being chose by Lot, the chief Magistrate sitting in a * Tent in the Middle of * Tabernaculum. the Campus Martius, ordered that Century to come out and give their Voices; upon which they presently separated from the Rest of the Multitude, and came into an inclosed Apartment, which they termed Septa, or Ostia, passing from the Pontes, or narrow Boards, laid there for the Occasion; on which Account, de Ponte dejici is to be denied the Privilege of voting, and Persons thus dealt with are called Septuani.

At the latter End of the Pontes stood the Diribitores (a Sort of Under-Officers, called so from dividing or marshalling the People) and delivered to every Man, in the * Tabellæ. Election of Magistrates, as many * Tablets as there appeared Candidates, one of whose Names was written upon every Tablet.

A fit Number of great Chests were set ready in the Septa, and every body threw in which Tablet he pleaded.

(a) Liv. lib. 40.

(b) Dionys. lib. 4.

By the Chests were placed some of the publick Servants, who taking out the Tablets of every Century, for every Tablet made a Prick, or a Point, in another Tablet which they kept by them. Thus the Business being decided by most Points, gave Occasion to the Phrase of Omne tulit punctum (a), and the like.

The same Method was observed in the judiciary Processes at these Comitia, and in the Confirmation of Laws; except that in both these Cases only two Tablets were offered to every Person, on one of which was written U. R. and on the other A. in capital Letters; the two first standing for Uti Rosas, or, Be it as you desire, relating to the Magistrate who proposed the Question; and the last for Antiquo, or, I forbid it.

It is remarkable, that though in the Election of Magistrates, and in the Ratification of Laws, the Votes of that Century, whose Tablets were equally divided, signified nothing; yet in Trials of Life and Death, if the Tablets pro and con were the same in Number, the Person was actually acquitted (b).

The Division of the People into Tribes was an Invention of Romulus, after he had admitted the Sabines into Rome; and tho' he constituted at that Time only three, yet as the State increased in Power, and the City in Number of Inhabitants, they rose by Degrees to five and thirty. For a long Time after this Institution, a Tribe signified no more than such a Space of Ground with its Inhabitants. But at last the Matter was quite altered, and a Tribe was no longer Pars Urbis, but Civitatis; not a Quarter of the City but a Company of Citizens living where they pleased. This Change was chiefly occasioned by the original Difference between the Tribes in Point of Honour. For Romulus having committed all sordid and mechanic Arts to the Care of Strangers, Slaves, and Libertines, and reserved the more honest Labour of Agriculture to the Freemen and Citizens, who, by this active Course of Life, might be prepared for martial Service; the Tribus Rusticæ were for this Reason esteemed more honourable than the Urbanæ: And now all Persons being desirous of getting into the more creditable Division, and there being several Ways of accomplishing their Wishes, as by Adoption, by the Power of the Consors, and the like; that Rustick Tribe which had most worthy Names in its Roll, had the Preference to all others, though of the same general Denomination. Hence all of the same great Family, bringing themselves by Degrees into the same Tribe, gave the Name of their Family to the Tribe they honoured; whereas at first, the Generality of the Tribes did not borrow their Names from Persons but from Places (a).

The first Assembly of the Tribes we meet with, is about the Year of Rome 252, convened by Sp. Sicinius, Tribune of the Centurians, upon Account of the Trial of Coriolanus. Soon after the Tribunes of the Commons were ordered to be elected here; and at last all the inferior Magistracies and the Collegiate Priests. The same Comitia served for the enacting Laws relating to War and Peace, and all others proposed by the Tribunes and Plebeian Officers, though they had not properly the Name of Leges, but Plebiscita. They were generally convened by Tribunes of the Commons; but the same Privilege was allowed to all the chief Magistrates.

They were confined to no Place, and therefore sometimes we find them held in the Comitium, sometimes in the Campus Martius, and now and then in the Capitol.

The Proceedings were in most Respects answerable to those already described in the Account of the other Comitia, and therefore need not be insisted on; only we may further observe of the Comitia in general, that when any Candidate was found to have most Tablets for a Magistracy, he was declared to be designed or elected, by the President of the Assembly: And this they termed renunciari Consul, Prator, or the like: And that the last Sort of the Comitia only could be held without the Consent and Approbation of the Senate, which was necessary to the convening of the other two (b).

Of the ROMAN Judgements; and first of Private Judgements.

A Judgement, according to Aristotle's Definition, is no more than Κρίσις τῶ δικαίου καὶ ἀδικοῦ, the Decision of Right and Wrong.

The whole Subject of the Roman Judgements is admirably explained by Sigonius in his three Books de Judiciis, from whom the following Account is for the most Part extracted.

Judgements

Judgements, or Determinations of a proper Judge, were made either by a competent Number of select Judges, or by the whole People in a general Assembly.

Judgements made by one or more select Judges, may be divided into publick and private; the first relating to Controversies, the second to Crimes.

The former will be sufficiently described, if we consider the Matter, or Subjects, of these Judgements, the Persons concerned in them, and the Manner of proceeding.

The Matter of private Judgements takes in all Sorts of Causes that can happen between Man and Man; which being so vastly extended, and belonging more immediately to the Civil Law, need not here be insisted on.

The Persons concerned were the Parties, the Assistants, and the Judges.

The Parties were the Actor and Reus, the Plaintiff and Defendant.

The Assistants were the Procuratores and the Advocati, of whom, though they are often confounded, yet the first were properly such Lawyers as assisted the Plaintiff in proving, or the Defendant in clearing himself from the Matter of Fact: The others, who were likewise called Patroni, were to defend their Client's Cause in Matters of Law (a).

Both these were selected out of the ablest Lawyers, and had their Names entered into the Matriculation-Book of the Forum. This was one Condition requisite to give them the Liberty of pleading; the other was the being retained by one Party, or the receiving a Fee, which they termed Mandatum (b).

The Judges, besides the Prætor, or supreme Magistrate, who presided in the Court, and allowed and confirmed them, were of three Sorts; Arbitri, Recuperatores, and Centumviri Litibus judicandis.

Arbitri, whom they called simply Judices, were appointed to determine in some private Causes of no great Consequence, and of very easy Decision.

Recuperatores were assigned to decide the Controversies about receiving or recovering Things which had been lost or taken away.

But the usual Judges in private Causes were the Centumviri; three of which were taken out of every Tribe, so that their Number was five more than their Name imported; and at length increased to a hundred and eighty. It is probable that the Arbitri and Recuperatores were assigned out of this Body by the Prætor.

(a) Zonab. Element. Jurisprud. p. 5. Sect. 3. (b) Ibid.

The Manner of carrying on the private Suits was of this Nature: The Difference failing to be made up between Friends, the injured Person proceeded in jus reum vocare, to summon or cite the offending Party to the Court; who was obliged immediately to go with him, or else to give Bond for his Appearance; according to the common Maxim, In jus vocatus aut eat, aut satisfdet.

Both Parties being met before the Prætor, or other supreme Magistrate presiding in the Court, the Plaintiff proposed the Action to the Defendant, in which he designed to sue him: This they termed Edere Actionem, being performed commonly by writing it on a Tablet, and offering it to the Defendant, that he might see whether he had best compound, or stand the Suit.

In the next Place came the Postulatio Actionis, or the Plaintiff's desiring Leave of the Prætor to prosecute the Defendant in such an Action: This being granted, the Plaintiff vadebatur reum, oblig'd him to give Sureties for his Appearance on such a Day in the Court; and this was all that was done in publick, before the prefixed Day for the Trial.

In the mean Time, the Difference used very often to be made up, either Transfatione, or Pactis, by letting the Cause fall as dubious and uncertain; or by Composition for so much Damage to be ascertained by an equal Number of Friends.

On the Day appointed for hearing, the Prætor ordered the several Bills to be read, and the Parties to be summoned by an Accusatus, or Beadle. Upon the Default of either Party, the Defaulters lost his Cause. The Appearing of both they termed sestisse; and then the Plaintiff proceeded Litem sive Actionem intendere, to prefer the Suit: which was performed in a set Form of Words, varying according to the Difference of the Action. After this the Plaintiff desired Judgement of the Prætor; that is, to be allowed a Judex, or Arbiter, or else the Recuperatores or Centumviri, for the hearing and deciding the Business; but none of these could be desired, unless both Parties agreed. The Prætor, when he assigned them their Judges, at the same Time desired the Number of Witnesses, to hinder the protracting of the Suit; and then the Parties proceeded to give Caution, that the Judgement, whatever it was, should stand and be performed on both Sides. The Judges always took a solemn Oath to be impartial; and the Parties swore they did not go to Law, with a Design

Design to abuse one another : This they called Juramentum Calumniæ. Then began the Disceptatio Causæ, or Disputing the Case, managed by the Lawyers on both Sides ; with the Assistance of Witnesses, Writings, and the like ; the Use of which is so admirably taught in their Books of Oratory.

In giving Sentence, the major Part of the Judges was required to overthrow the Defendant. If the Number was equally divided, the Defendant was actually cleared ; and if half condemned him in one Sum to be paid, and half in another, the least Sum always stood good (a).

The Consequence of the Sentence was either in integrum Restitutio, Addictio, Judicium Calumniæ, or Judicium Falsi.

The first was, when, upon Petition of the Party who was overthrown, the Prætor gave him Leave to have the Suit come on again, and allowed him another full Hearing.

Addictio was, when the Party who had been cast in such a Sum, unless he gave Surety to pay it in a little Time, was brought by the Plaintiff before the Prætor, who delivered him into his Disposal, to be committed to Prison, or otherwise secured, 'till Satisfaction was made.

Judicium Calumniæ, was an Action brought against the Plaintiff for false Accusation.

Judicium Falsi, was an Action which lay against the Judges for Corruption and unjust Proceedings.

Of Publick JUDGEMENTS.

FOR the Knowledge of Publick Judgements, we may take Notice of the Crimes, of the Punishments, of the Qualitates and Judges, of the Method of Proceeding, and of the Consequences of the Trial.

The Crimes, or the Matter of publick Judgements, were such Actions as tended either mediately or immediately to the Prejudice of the State, and were forbid by the Laws. As if any Person had derogated from the Honour and Majesty of the Commonwealth ; had embezzled or put to ill Uses the publick Money, or any Treasure consecrated to Religion ; or had corrupted rupted the People's Votes in an Election ; or had extorted Contributions from the Allies ; or received Money in any Judgement ; or had used any violent Compulsion to a Member of the Commonwealth : These they termed Crimina Majestatis, Peculatiūs, Ambitūs, Repetundarum, Vis publica. Or if any Person had killed another with a Weapon, or effected the same with Poison, or laid violent Hands on his Parents ; or had forged a Will ; or counterfeited the publick Coin ; or had corrupted another Man's Wife ; or had bought, bound, or concealed a Servant without the Knowledge of his Master : Whence these Crimes took the Names of inter Sicarios, Veneficii, Parricidii, Falsi, Adulterii, Plagii.

Besides these, any private Cause, by Virtue of a new Law, might be made of publick Cognizance.

As to the Punishments, they may be allowed a Chapter by themselves hereafter.

The Inquisition of criminal Matters belonged at first to the Kings, and after the Abrogation of the Government, for some Time, to the Consuls : But being taken from them by the Valerian Law, it was conferred, as Occasion happened, upon Officers deputed by the People, with the Title of Quæstores Parricidii. But, about the Year of the City 604, this Power was made perpetual, and appropriated to the Prætors, by Virtue of an Order of the People at their annual Election ; the Inquisition of such and such Crimes being committed to such and such Prætors : Yet, upon extraordinary Occasions, the People could appoint other Quæstores, if they thought convenient.

Next to the Quæstores was the Judex Quæstionis ; called also by Asconius, Princeps Judicum, who, though he is sometimes confounded with the Prætor, yet was properly a Person of Note, deputed by the Prætor, to manage the Trial, of which the former Magistrate performed only the main Business.

After him were the Judices selecti, who were summoned by the Prætor to give their Verdict in criminal Matters, in the same Manner as our Juries. What Alterations were made in different Times as to the Orders of the People whence the Judices were to be taken, will be observed when we speak of the particular Laws on this Head (a). No Person could regularly be admitted into the Number, unless five and twenty Years of Age (b).

As to the Method of the Proceedings, the first Action which they termed in Jus Vocatio, was much the same in publick as in private Causes : But then, as the Postulatio of the Plaintiff consisted in desiring Leave of the Prætor to enter a Suit against the Defendant : So here the Accuser desired Permission to enter the Name of the Offender, with the Crime which he objected to him : This they called Nominis Delatio ; being performed first vivâ voce, in a Form of Words, according to the Nature of the Crime, and then offered to the Prætor, being writ in a Tablet ; if approved by the Prætor, the accused Party's Name was entered in the Roll of Criminals, both Persons having taken the Oath of Calumny already spoken of.

At the Entrance of the Name, the Prætor appointed a set Day for the Trial ; and from that Time the accused Person changed his Habit, going in Black 'till the Trial was over, and using in his Dress and Carriage all Tokens of Sorrow and Concern.

Upon the appointed Day, the Court being met, and both Parties appearing, the first thing that was done, was the Sortitio Judicum, or impannelling the Jury ; performed commonly by the Judex Quæstionis, who took by Lot such a Number out of the Body of the Judices selecti, as the particular Law on which the Accusation was founded, had determined ; Liberty being given to both Parties to reject (or, as we call it, to challenge) any that they pleaded, the Prætor, or Judex Quæstionis, substituting others in their Places.

The Jury being thus chosen, was cited by the publick Servants of the Court ; and when the proper Number appeared, they were sworn, and then took their Places in the Subsellia, and heard the Trial.

In this we may reckon four Parts, Accusatio, Defensio, Laudatio, and Latitio sententiæ.

Accusatio is defined, Perpetua oratio ad crimina inferenda atque augenda artificiosè composita : A continued Oration artificially composed for the making out and brightening the Crimes alledged : For it did not only consist in giving a plain Narration of the Matter of Fact, and confirming it by Witnesses and other Evidences ; but in bringing of other Arguments too, drawn from the Nature of the Thing, from the Character of the accused Person, and his former Course of Life, from the Circumstances of the Fact, and several other Topicks, which the Orators teach us to enlarge upon : Nor was the Accuser limited in Respect of Time, being allowed commonly as many Days as he pleased, to make good his Charge.

Defensio belonged to the Lawyers or Advocates retained by the accused Party, who in like Manner were allowed to speak as many Days as they pleased, towards the clearing of their Client.

The

The three common Methods they took, were Facti negatio, negatio nominis facti, or probatio jure factum : Either plainly to deny the Matter of Fact, and endeavour to evince the contrary; or else to acknowledge the Fact, and yet to deny that it fell under the Nature of the Crime objected; or lastly, to prove the Fact lawful.

The first Way of Defence was generally used when the Person stood indicted of what they called Crimen repetundarum, and Crimen ambitus; the next in the Crimen Majestatis; and the last in Cases of Murder.

Cicero has given us an excellent Example in every Kind. Of the first in his Orations for Fonteius, Flaccus, Muræna, and Plancius; of the second in that for Cornelius; and of the third in his admirable Defence of Milo.

Laudatio was a Custom like that in our Trials, of bringing in Persons of Credit to give their Testimony of the accused Person's good Behaviour, and Integrity of Life. The least Number of the Laudatores used to be Ten.

In the Latio Sententiæ, or Pronouncing Sentence, they proceeded thus: After the Orators on both Sides had said all they designed, the Crier gave Notice of it accordingly; and then the Prætor sent out the Jury to consult (mittebat Judices in consilium) delivering to every one three Tablets covered with Wax, one of Absolution, another of Condemnation, and a third of Ampliation, or Adjournment of the Trial; the first being marked with A; the second with C; the other with N. L. or non liquet.

In the Place where the Jury withdrew, was set a proper Number of Urns, or Boxes, into which they threw what Tablet they pleased; the accused Person prostrating himself all the while at their Feet, to move their Compassion.

The Tablets being drawn, and the greatest Number known, the Prætor pronounced Sentence accordingly. The Form of Condemnation was usually Videtur fecisse, or Non jure videtur fecisse: Of Absolution, Non videtur fecisse: Of Amplification, Amplius cognoscendum, or rather the bare Word AMPLIUS: This Asconius teaches us; Mos veterum hic fuerat, ut si absolvendus quis esset, statim absolveretur; si damnandus, statim damnaretur; si causa non esset idonea ad damnationem, absolvi tamen non posset, AMPLIUS pronunciaretur. Sometimes he mentioned the Punishment, and sometimes left it out, as being determined by the Law, on which the Indictment was grounded.

The Consequences of the Trial in criminal Matters may be reduced to these four Heads, Æstimatio litis, Animadversio, Judicium calumniæ, and Judicium prævaricationis.

Æstimatio

Æstimatio litis, or the Rating of the Damages, was in Use only in Cases of Bribery, and Abuse of the publick Money.

Animadversio, was no more than the putting the Sentence in Execution, which was left to the Care of the Prætor.

But in case the Party was absolved, there lay two Actions against the Accuser; one of Calumny, the common Punishment of which was Frontis inussio, burning in the Forehead: And the other of Prevarication, when the Accuser, instead of urging the Crime home, seemed rather to hide or extenuate the Guilt: Hence the Civilians define a Provaricator, to be One that betrays his Cause to the Adversary, and turns on the Criminal's Side, whom he ought to prosecute.

CHAP. XIX.

Judgements of the whole People.

THE People were sometimes the Judges, both in private and publick Causes; though of the first we have only one Example in Livy; the other we frequently meet with in Authors.

These Judgements were made first at the Comitia Curiata, and afterwards at the Centuriata and Tributa; the Proceedings in all which Assemblies have been already shown; what we may further observe is this: When any Magistrate designed to impeach a Person of a Crime before the whole People, he ascended the Rostra, and calling the People together by a Crier, signified to them, That, upon such a Day, he intended to accuse such a Person of such a Crime: This they termed Res dicere: The suspected Party was obliged immediately to give Sureties for his Appearance on the Day prefixed, and, in Default of Bail, was committed to Prison.

On the appointed Day, the Magistrate again ascended the Rostra, and cited the Party by the Crier; who, unless some other Magistrate of equal Authority interposed, or a sufficient Excuse was offered, was obliged to appear, or might be punished at the Pleasure of the Magistrate who accused him. If he appeared, the Accuser began his Charge, and carried it on every other Day, for six Days together; at the End of the Indictment mentioning the particular Punishment specified in the Law for such an Offence. This Intimation they termed Inquisitio. The same was immediately after expressed in Writing, and then took the Name of Rogatio, in Respect of the People, who were to be asked or consulted about it; and Irrogatio, in Respect of the Criminal, as it imported the Mulct or Punishment assigned him by the Accuser. This Rogatio was publicly exposed three Nundinae, or Market-days together, for the Information of the People. On the third Market-day, the Accuser again ascended the Rostra; and, the People being called together, undertook the fourth Turn of his Charge, and, having concluded, gave the other Party Leave to enter upon his Defence, either in his own Person, or by his Advocates.

At the same Time as the Accuser finished his fourth Charge, he gave Notice what Day he would have the Comitia meet to receive the Bill; the Comitia Tributa to consider of Mulcts, and the Centuriata for capital Punishments.

But in the mean Time, there were several Ways by which the accused Party might be relieved; as first, if the Tribunes of the Commons interposed in his Behalf; or if he excused himself by voluntary Exile, Sicknefs, or upon Account of providing for a Funeral; or if he prevailed with the Accuser to relinquish his Charge, and let the Cause fall; or if upon the Day appointed for the Comitia, the Augurs discovered any ill Omens, and so forbade the Assembly.

If none of these happened, the Comitia met, and proceeded as has been already described; and as for their Animadversio, or putting Sentence in Execution, this was performed in the same Manner as in the Prætorian Judgements.

The Forms of Judgements which have been thus described, must be supposed to have prevailed chiefly in the Time of the free State: For as the Kings before, so the Emperors afterwards, were themselves Judges in what Causes, and after what Manner they pleased, as Suetonius particularly informs us of almost all the twelve Cæsars. It was this gave Occasion to the Rise of the Mandatores and Delatores, a Sort of Wretches to be met with in every Part of History. The Business of the former was to mark down such Persons as upon Inquisition they pretended to have found guilty of any Misdemeanour; and the latter were employed in accusing and prosecuting them upon the other's Order. This mischievous Tribe, as they were countenanced and rewarded by all Princes, so were they extremely detested by the good Emperors. Titus prosecuted all that could be found upon the most diligent Search, with Death or perpetual Banishment (a): And Pliny reckons it among the greatest Praises of Trajan, that he had cleared the City from the perjured Race of Informers (b).

C H A P XX.

Of the ROMAN Punishments.

THE accurate Sigonius has divided the Punishments into eight Sorts, Damnum, Vincula, Verbera, Talio, Ignominia, Exilium, Servitus, Mors.

Damnum was a pecuniary Mulct or Fine set upon the Offender, according to the Quality of the Crime.

Vinculum signifies the guilty Persons being condemned to Imprisonment and Fetters, of which they had many Sorts, as Manicæ, Pedicæ, Nervæ, Boiæ, and the like. The publick Prison in Rome was built by Ancus Martius, hard by the Forum (a): To which a new Part was added by Servius Tullius, called thence Tullianum: Sallust describes the Tullianum as an Apartment under Ground (b), into which they put the most notorious Criminals. The higher Part, raised by Ancus Martius, has commonly the Name of the Robur, from the oaken Plants which composed it. For the keeping of the Prison, besides the Triumviri, was appointed a Sort of Gaoler, whom Valerius Maximus calls Custos Carceris (c), and Pliny Commentariensis (d).

Verbera, or Stripes, were inflicted either with Rods [Virgæ] or with Batons [Fustes]: The first commonly preceded capital Punishments properly so called: The other was most in Use in the Camp, and belouged to the military Discipline.

Talio was a Punishment by which the guilty Person suffered exactly after the same Manner as he had offended; as in Cases of maiming, and the like. Yet A. Gellius informs us that the Criminal was allowed the Liberty of compounding with the

(a) Liv. lib. 1. (b) In Bello Catilinar. (c) Lib. 5. (d) Lib. 7. cap. 58.
Person

Person he had injured; so that he needed not suffer the Talla, unless he voluntarily chose it (a).

Ignominia was no more than a publick Shame, which the offending Person underwent, either by Virtue of the Prætor's Edict; or more commonly by Order of the Censor: This Punishment, besides the Scandal, took away from the Party, on whom it was inflicted, the Privilege of bearing any Office, and almost all other Liberties of a Roman Citizen.

Exilium was not a Punishment immediately, but by Consequence; for the Phrase used in the Sentence and Laws, was Aque & Ignis Interdictio, the Forbidding the Use of Water and Fire, which being necessary for Life, the condemned Person was obliged to leave his Country. Yet in the Times of the latter Emperors, we find it to have been a positive Punishment, as appears from the Civil Law. Relegatio may be reckoned under this Head, though it were something different from the former; this being the sending a Criminal to such a Place, or for such a Time, or perhaps for ever, by which the Party was not deprived of the Privilege of a Citizen of Rome, as he was in the first Sort of Banishment, which they properly called Exilium. Suetonius speaks of a new Sort of Relegatio invented by the Emperor Claudius, by which he ordered suspected Persons not to stir three Miles from the City (b). Besides this Relegatio they had two other Kinds of Banishment, which they termed Deportatio, and Proscriptio; though nothing is more common than to have them confounded in most Authors. Deportatio, or Transportation, differed in these Respects from Relegatio; that whereas the Relegati were condemned either to change their Country for a set Time, or for ever, and lost neither their Estate and Goods, nor the Privilege of Citizens: On the contrary, the Deportati were banished always for ever, and lost both their Estates and Privileges, being counted dead in the Law (c). And as for the Proscripti, they are defined by the Lawyers to be such Persons whose Names were fixed up in Tablets at the Forum, to the End that they might be brought to Justice: A Reward being proposed to those that took them, and a Punishment to those that concealed them (d). Sylla was the first Inventor of this Practice, and gave himself the greatest Example of it that we meet with, proscribing 2000 Knights and Senators at once (e). It is plain, that this was not a positive Banishment, but a Forcing Persons to make Use of that Security; so that we may fancy it of like Nature with our Outlawry.

Servitus was a Punishment, by which the Criminal's Person, as well as Goods, was publicly exposed to Sale by Auction: This rarely happened to the Citizens, but was an usual Way of treating Captives taken in War, and therefore will be described hereafter.

Under the Head of capital Punishments, the Romans reckoned extreme Banishment; because those who underwent Mors. that Sentence, were in a civil Sense dead. But because this Punishment has been already described, we are only now to take Notice of such as reached the Offender's Life.

The chief of these were Percussio securi, Strangulatio, Præcipitatio de robore, Dejectio à rupe Tarpeia. In crucem Actio, and Projectio in profluentem.

The first was the same as Beheading with us.

The second was performed in the Prison, as it is now in Turkey.

The third and fourth were a Throwing the Criminal headlong, either from that Part of the Prison called Robur; or from the highest Part of the Tarpeian Mountain.

The fifth Punishment, namely Crucifixion, was seldom inflicted on any but Slaves, or the meanest of the Commons; yet we find some Examples of a different Practice; and Suetonius particularly relates of the Emperor Galba, that having condemned a Roman Citizen to suffer this Punishment for poisoning his Ward, the Gentleman, as he was carrying to Execution, made a grievous Complaint that a Citizen of Rome should undergo such a servile Death; alledging the Laws to the contrary: The Emperor, hearing his Plea, promised to alleviate the Shame of his Sentence, and ordered a Cross much larger, and more neat than ordinary, to be erected, and to be washed over with white Paint, that the Gentleman, who stood so much on his Quality, might have the Honour to be hanged in State (a).

The Cross and the Furca are commonly taken for the same Thing in Authors; though, properly speaking, there was a great Difference between them. The Furca is divided by Lipsius into Ignominiosa and Pœnalis: The former Plutarch describes to be that Piece of Wood which supports the Thill of a Waggon: He adds, that it was one of the greatest Penances for a Servant who had offended, to take this upon his Shoulders, and carry it about the Neighbourhood; for whoever was seen with this infamous Burthen, had no longer any Credit or Trust among those who knew it, but was called Furcifer, by Way of Ignominy and Reproach (a). Furca pœnalis was a Piece of Wood, much of the same Shape as the former, which was fastened about the convicted Person's Neck, he being generally either scourged to Death under it, or lifted up by it upon the Cross. Lipsius makes it the same with the Patibulum, and fancies, that for all the Name, it might not be a forked Piece of Timber, but rather a straight Beam, to which the Criminal's Arms, being stretched out, were tied, and which, being hoisted up, at the Place of Execution, served for the transverse Part of the Cross.

Prociatio in profluentem was a Punishment proper to the Crime of Parricide (or the Murder of any near Relation :) The Person convicted of this unnatural Guilt, was immediately hooded, as unworthy of the common Light : In the next Place, he was whipped with Rods, and then sewed up in a Sack, and thrown into the Sea; or, in inland Countries, into the next Lake or River. Afterwards, for an Addition to the Punishment, a Serpent used to be put into the Sack with the Criminal; and by Degrees, in latter Times, an Ape, a Dog, and a Cock. The Sack which held the Malefactor was termed Culeus; and hence the Punishment itself is often signified by the same Name. The Reason of the Addition of the living Creatures is thought to have been, that the condemned Persons might be tormented with such troublesome Company, and that their Carcasses might want both Burial and Rest. Juvenal expressly alludes to this Custom in his eighth Satyr :

*Libera si dentur populo suffragia, quis tam
Perditus, ut dubitet Senecam præferre Neroni,
Cujus supplicio non debuit una parari
Simia non serpens unus, non Culeus unus?*

Had we the Freedom to express our Mind,
There's not a Wretch so much to Vice inclin'd,
But will own Seneca did excel
His Pupil, by whose Tyranny he fell,
To expiate whole complicated Guilt,
With some Proportion to the Blood he spilt,
Rome should more Serpents, Apes, and Sacks provide Than one, for the compendious Parricide. Mr. Stepney.

The same Poet in another Place intimates, that this Sack was made of Leather.

Tully, in his Defence of Sextus Roscius, who stood arraigned for Parricide, has given an admirable Account of this Punishment, with the Reason on which it was grounded; particularly, that the Malefactor was thrown into the Sea, sewed up in a Sack, for fear he should pollute that Element, which was reckoned the common Purifier of all Things: With many the like ingenious Reflections.

Besides the Punishments mentioned by Sigonius, who seems to consider the Roman People as in a free State, we meet with Abundance of others, either invented or revived in the Times of the Emperors, and especially in latter Ages: Among these, we may take Notice of three, as the most considerable, ad Ludos, ad Metalla, ad Bestias.

The Lawyers divide Ludus, when they take it for a Punishment, into Venatorius and Gladiatorius (a). By the former the convicted Persons (commonly Slaves) were obliged to engage with the wild Beasts in the Amphitheatre; by the latter, they were to perform the Part of Gladiators, and satisfy Justice by killing one another.

Ad Metalla, or condemning to work in the Mines, Suidas would have to be invented by Tarquinius Superbus (b). Whatever Reason he had for his Assertion, it is certain we rarely find it mentioned till the Times of the late Emperors; and particularly in the Histories of the Persecutions of the Christians, who were usually sent in great Numbers to this laborious and slavish Employment; with the Name of Metallici.

The Throwing of Persons to wild Beasts, was never put in Execution, but upon the vilest and most despicable Malefactors in Crimes of the highest Nature. This too was the common Doom of the Primitive Christians; and it is to the Accounts of their Sufferings we are beholden for the Knowledge of it. It may be observed, that the Phrase, Ad bestias dari (c), affects as well such Criminals as were condemned to fight with the Beasts, as those who were delivered to them to be devoured: And the former of these were properly termed Bestiarii (d).

There is still one Punishment behind worth our Observation, and which seems to have been proper to Incendiaries, and that was the Wrapping up the Criminal in a Sort of Coat, daubed over with Pitch, and then setting it on Fire. Thus when Nero had burnt Rome, to satisfy his Curiosity with the Prospect, he contrived to lay the Odium on the Christians, as a Sort of Men generally detested; and, seizing on all he could discover, ordered them to be lighted up in this Manner, to serve for Tapers in the Dark; which was a much more cruel Jest than the former, that occasioned it. Juvenal alludes to this Custom in his eighth Satyr:

Ausi quod liceat tunicâ punire molesta.

To recompense whose barbarous Intent,
Pitch'd Shirts would prove a legal Punishment.

C H A P. XXI.

Of the ROMAN LAWS in general.

IN the Beginning of the Roman State, we are assured all Things were managed by the sole Authority of the King, without any certain Standard of Justice and Equity. But when the City grew tolerably populous, and was divided by Romulus into thirty Curiae, he began to prefer Laws at the Assembly of those Curiae, which were confirmed, and universally received. The like Practice was followed by Numa, and several other Kings; all whose Constitutions being collected in one Body, by Sextus Papirius, who lived in the Time of Tarquin the Proud, took from him the Name of Jus Papirianum.

But all these were abrogated soon after the Expulsion of the Royal Family, and the judicial Proceedings for many Years together depended only on Custom, and the Judgement of the Court. At last, to redress this Inconvenience, Commissioners were sent into Greece, to make a Collection of the best Laws for the Service of their Country; and at their Return, the Decemviri were created to regulate the Business, who reduced them into twelve Tables, as has been already shewn. The Excellency of which Institution, as it is sufficiently set forth by most Authors, so it is especially beholden to the high Eulogium of Cicero, when he declares it as his positive Judgement and Opinion,

That

That the Laws of the Twelve Tables are justly to be preferred to whole Libraries of the Philosophers (a).

They were divided into three Parts, of which the first related to the Concerns of Religion; the second to the Rights of the Publick; and the last to private Persons.

These Laws being established, it necessarily followed, that there should be Disputations and Controversies in the Courts, since the Interpretation was to be founded upon the Authority of the Learned. This Interpretation they called Jus Civile, though at present we understand, by that Phrase, the whole System of the Roman Laws.

Besides, out of all these Laws the learned Men of that Time composed a Scheme of Forms and Cases, by which the Processes in the Courts were directed. These were termed Actiones Legis.

We may add to these the Laws preferred at the publick Assemblies of the People; and the Plebiscita, made without the Authority of the Senate, at the Comitia Tributa, which were allowed to be of equal Force with other Constitutions, though they were not honoured with the Title of Leges.

And then the Senatus-consulta, and Edicts of the supreme Magistrates, particularly of the Prætors, made up two more Sorts of Laws, the last of which they called Jus Honorarium.

And lastly, when the Government was intrusted in the Hands of a single Person, whatever he ordained, had the Authority of a Law, with the Name of Principalis Constitutio.

Most of these daily increasing, gave so much Scope to the Lawyers for the Compiling of Reports and other Labours, that, in the Reign of Justinian, there were extant two thousand distinct Volumes on this Subject. The Body of the Law being thus grown unwieldy, and rendered almost useless by its excessive Bulk, that excellent Emperor entered on a Design to bring it into just Dimensions; which was happily accomplished in the constituting those four Tomes of the Civil Law, which are now extant, and have contributed, in a great Measure, to the Regulating of all the States in Christendom: So that the old Fancy of the Romans, about the Eternity of their Command, is not so ridiculous as at first Sight it appears; since, by their admirable Sanctions, they are still like to govern for ever.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the LAWS in particular; and first, of those relating to RELIGION.

AS for the Laws of the Twelve Tables, and other more ancient Institutions, as it would require no ordinary Stock of Criticism barely to explain their Words; so is the Knowledge of them almost useless, since they are so seldom mentioned by the Classics. Those which we generally meet with, are such as were preferred by some particular Magistrate, from whom they took their Names; these, by Reason of their frequent Occurrence in the best Writers, deserve a short Explication, according to the common Heads laid down by those Authors, who have hitherto managed this Subject; beginning with such as concerned the publick Worship, and the Ceremonies of Religion.

Sulpicia Sempronia Lex, the Authors P. Sulpicius Saveria and P. Sempronius Sophus, in their Consulship, A. 449, ordaining, That no Person should consecrate any Temple, or Altar, without the Order of the Senate, and the major Part of the Tribunes (a).

Papiria Lex, the Author L. Papirius, Tribune of the Commons, commanding, That no Person should have the Liberty of consecrating any Edifice, Place, or Thing, without the Leave of the Commons (b).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, defining the Expences of Funerals (c).

Sexta Licinia Lex, the Authors L. Sextus and Licinius, Tribunes of the Commons, A. 385, commanding, That instead of the Duumviri sacris faciundis, a Decemvirate should be created, Part out of the Patricians, and Part out of the Commons (d).

Ogulinia Lex, the Authors Q. and Ca. Ogulnius, Tribunes of the Commons, A. 453, commanding, That whereas there were then but four Pontifices, and four Augurs, five more should be added out of the Commons to each Order (e).

Manlia Lex, the Author P. Manlius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 557, enacted for the Revival of the Tresviri Epulones, an old Institution of Numa's (a).

Clodia Lex, the Author P. Clodius, in his Tribuneship, A. 664, divesting the Priest of Cybele (or the Great Mother, who came from Pessinum) of his Office, and conferring it on Brotigarus, a Gallo-Græcian (b).

Papia Lex, ordering the Manner of chusing the Vestal Virgins (c), as has been already described.

The Punishment of those holy Recluses is grounded on the Laws of Numa.

Licina Lex, preferred by C. Licinius Crassus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 608, for the transferring the Right of chusing Priests, from the College to the People (d); but it did not pass (e).

Domitia Lex, the Author Gn. Domitius Ahenobarbus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 650, actually transferring the said Right to the People (f).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator and Consul with Q. Metellus, A. 677, abrogating the former Law of Domitius, and restoring the Privilege there mentioned to the College (g).

Attia Lex, the Author T. Attius Labienus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 690, repealing the Cornelian Law, and restoring the Domitian (h).

Antonia Lex, the Author M. Antony, in his Consulship with Julius Cæsar, A. 700, abrogating the Attian Law, and restoring the Cornelian (i). Pavus Manutius has conjectured from several Reasons, that this Law of Antony was afterwards repealed, and the Right of chusing Priests entrusted in the Hands of the People.

To this Head is commonly referred the Law about the Exemption from military Service, or de Vacatione, in which there was a very remarkable Clause, Nisi Bellum Gallicum exoritur: Unless in Case of a Gallick Insurrection. In which Case, no Persons, not the Priests themselves, were excused; the Romans apprehending more Danger from the Gauls than from any other Nation, because they had once taken their City (k).

Licina Lex, the Author P. Licinius Varus, City Prætor, A. 545, settling the Day for the Celebration of the Ludi Apollinares, which was before uncertain (a).

Roscia Lex Theatralis, the Author L. Roscius Otho, Tribune of the Commons, A. 685, ordaining, That none should sit in the first fourteen Seats of the Theatre, unless they were worth four hundred Sestertio, which was then reckoned the Census Equestris (b).

Augustus Cæsar, after several of the Equestrian Families had impaired their Estates in the Civil Wars, interpreted this Law so as to take in all those whose Ancestors ever had possessed the Sum there specified.

LAWS relating to the Rights and Privileges of the ROMAN Citizens.

VALERIA Lex de Provocatione, the Author P. Valerius Poplicola, sole Consul upon the Death of his Colleague Brutus, A. 243, giving Liberty to appeal from any Magistrate to the People, and ordering that no Magistrate should punish a Roman Citizen in Case of such an Appeal (a).

Valeria Horatia Lex, the Authors L. Valerius and M. Horatius, Consuls, A. 304, reviving the former Law, which had lost its Force under the Decemvirate (b).

Valeria Lex Tertia, the Author M. Valerius Corvinus, in his Consulship with Q. Apulius Pansa, A. 453, no more than a Confirmation of the first Valerian Law (c).

Porcia Lex, the Author M. Porcius, Tribune of the Commons, in the same Year as the former, commanding that no Magistrate should execute, or punish with Rods, a Citizen of Rome; but, upon the Sentence of Condemnation, should give him Permission to go into Exile (d).

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of Commons, A. 630, commanding that no capital Judgment should pass upon a Citizen, without the Authority of the People, and making several other Regulations in this Affair (a).

Papia Lex de Peregrinis, the Author C. Papius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 688, commanding, That all Strangers should be expelled Rome (b).

Junia Lex, the Author M. Junius Pennus, confirming the former Law, and forbidding, that any Strangers should be allowed the Privilege of Citizens (c).

Servilia Lex, the Author C. Servilius Glaucia, ordaining, That if any Latin accused a Roman Senator, so that he was convicted, the Accuser should be honoured with the Privilege of a Citizen of Rome (d).

Licina Mutia Lex, the Authors L. Licinius Crassus and Q. Mutius Scævola, in their Consulship, A. 658, ordering all the Inhabitants of Italy to be enrolled in the List of Citizens, in their own proper Cities (e).

Livia Lex de Sociis: In the Year of the City 662, M. Livius Drusus proposed a Law to make all the Italians free Denizens of Rome; but before it came to be voted, he was found murdered in his House, the Author unknown (f).

Varia Lex: Upon the Death of Drusus, the Knights prevailed with his Collegue Q. Varius Hybrida, to bring in a Bill for the prosecuting all such Persons as should be discovered to have assisted the Italian People, in the Petition for the Privilege of the City (g).

Julia Lex de Civitate: The next Year, upon the Revolt of several States in Italy, (which they call the Social War) L. Julius Cæsar, the Consul, made a Law, that all those People, who had continued firm to the Roman Interest, should have the Privilege of Citizens (h): And in the Year 664, upon the Conclusion of that War, all the Italian People were admitted into the Roll of free Denizens, and divided into eight new Tribes (i).

Sulpicia Lex, the Author P. Sulpicius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 665, ordaining, That the new Citizens, who composed the eight Tribes, should be divided among the thirty-five old Tribes, as a greater Honour (b).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, A. 670, a Confirmation of the former Law, to please the Italian Confederates (c).

Cornelia Lex de Municipiis, the Author the same Sylla, in his Dictatorship, taking away the Privilege formerly granted to the Corporate Towns, from as many as had assisted Marius, Cinna, Sulpicius, or any of the contrary Faction (d).

Gellia Cornelia Lex, the Authors L. Gellius Poplicola and G. Cornelius Lentulus, A. 681, ordaining, That all those Persons whom Pompey, by his own Authority, had honoured with the Privilege of the City, should actually keep that Liberty (e).

LAWS concerning Meetings and Assemblies.

ÆLIA Lex, ordaining, That in all Assemblies of the People, the Augurs should make Observations from the Heavens; and, That the Magistrates should have the Power of declaring against the Proceedings, and of interposing in the Decision of any Matter.

Fufia Lex, ordaining, That upon some certain Days, though they were Fastis, it should be unlawful to transact any Thing in a Meeting of the People.

The Authors of these two Laws are unknown; but P. Manutius conjectures, that the first is owing to Q. Ælius Paullus, Consul with M. Junius Pennus, A. 586. The other to P. Fufius, or Fufius, Consul with S. Atilius Scranus, A. 617. The Laws themselves occur frequently in Writers.

Clodia Lex, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, containing an Abrogation of the greatest Part of the two former Laws, and ordering, That no Observation should be made from the Heavens upon the Days of the Comitia; and, That on any of the Dies Fasti, Laws might be enacted in a publick Assembly (a.)

Curia Lex, the Author M. Curius Dentatus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 454, ordaining, That no Comitia should be convened for the Election of Magistrates, without the Approbation of the Senate: Ut ante Comitia Magistratum Patres auctores fierent (b).

Claudia Lex, the Author M. Claudius Marcellus, Consul with Serv. Sulpicius Ruffus, A. 702, ordering, That at the Comitia for the Election of Magistrates, no Account should be taken of the Absent (c).

Gabinia Lex, the Author A. Gabinius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 614, commanding, That in the Comitia for the Election of Magistrates, the People should not give their Suffrages viva voce, but by Tablets, for the greater Freedom and Impartiality of the Proceedings (d).

Cassia Lex, enacted about two Years after, commanding, That in the Courts of Justice, and in the Comitia Tributa, the Votes should be given in a free Manner; that is, by Tablets (e).

Papyria Lex, the Author Q. Papyrius Carbo, Tribune of the Commons, A. 621, ordaining, That in the Comitia about the passing or rejecting of Laws, the Suffrages should be given by Tablets (f).

Cælia Lex, the Author Cælius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 635, ordaining, That in the judicial Proceedings before the People, in Cases of Treason (which had been excepted by the Cassian Law) the Votes shall be given by Tablets (g).

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, in the same Year as the former; ordering, That the Centuries should be chosen out by Lot to give their Votes, and not according to the Order of the Classes (h).

Maria Lex, the Author C. Marius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 634, ordering the Bridges, or long Planks, on which the People stood in the Comitia to give their Voices, to be made narrower, that no other Persons might stand there, to hinder the Proceedings by Appeals or other Disturbances (i).

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 565, ordaining, That the Latin Confederates should have the Privilege of giving their Suffrages, as well as the Roman Citizens (a).

Manilia Lex, the Author C. Manilius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 687, ordaining, That the Libertini should have the Privilege of voting in all the Tribes (b).

LAWs relating to the SENATE.

CASSIA Lex, the Author L. Cassius Longinus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 649, ordaining, That no Person, who had been condemned or deprived of his Rights by the People, should have the Privilege of coming into the Senate (a).

Claudia Lex, the Author Q. Claudius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 535, commanding, That no Senator, or Father of a Senator, should possess a sailing Vessel above three hundred Amphoræ; this was thought big enough for the bringing over Fruits and other Necessaries; and as for Gain, procured by Trading in Merchandize, they thought it unworthy the Dignity of that Order (b).

Sulpicia Lex, the Author Servius Sulpicius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 665, requiring, That no Senator should owe above two thousand Drachmæ (c).

Sentia Lex, the Author (probably) C. Sentius, Consul with Q. Lucretius, A. 734, in the Time of Augustus ordering, That in the Room of such Noblemen as were wanting in the Senate, others should be substituted (d).

Gabinus Lex, the Author A. Gabinus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 685, ordering, That the Senate should be convened from

from the Kalends of February to the Kalends of March, every Day, for the giving Audience to Foreign Ministers (a.)

Pupia Lex, ordaining that the Senate should not be convened from the Eighteenth of the Kalends of February, to the Kalends of the same Month; and that before the Embassies were either accepted or rejected, the Senate should be held on no other Account (b).

Tullia Lex, the Author M. Tullius Cicero, Consul with C. Antony, A. 690, ordaining, That such Persons to whom the Senate had allowed the Favour of a Libera Legatio, should hold that Honour no longer than a Year. Libera Legatio was a Privilege that the Senators often obtained for the going into any Province, or Country, where they had some private Business, in the Quality of Lieutenants; though with no Command, but only that the Dignity of their Titular Office might have an Influence on the Management of their private Concerns (c).

CHAP. XXVI.

LAWS relating to the MAGISTRATES.

LEX Villia Annalis, or Annaria, the Author L. Villius (for whom we sometimes find L. Julius, or Lucius Tullius) Tribune of the Commons, A. 574, defining the proper Age requisite for bearing of all the Magistracies (a). Liwy, who relates the Making of this Law, does not insist on the particular Ages; and learned Men are much divided about that Point. Lipsius states the Difference after this Manner: The Age proper to sue for the Quæstorship, he makes twenty-five Years; for the Ædiles and Tribunes, twenty-seven or twenty-eight; thirty for the Prætor, and forty-two for the Consuls.

Genetia Lex, the Author L. Genetius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 415, commanding, That no Person should bear the same Magistracy within ten Years Distance, nor should be invested with two Offices in one Year (b).

Cornelia Lex, the Author Cornelius Sylla, the Dictator, A. 673, a Repetition and Confirmation of the former Law (c).

(a) Lex. lib. 40. (b) Tit. lib. 7. (c) Appian. lib. 1. de Bell. Civil.

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 630, ordaining, That no Person, who had been lawfully deprived of his Magistracy, should be capable of bearing an Office again. This was abrogated afterwards by the Author (a).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator; ordaining, That such Persons as had embraced his Party in the late Troubles, should have the Privilege of bearing Honours before they were capable by Age; and that the Children of those who had been proscribed, should lose the Power of standing for any Office (b).

Hirtia Lex, the Author A. Hirtius, ordaining, That none of Pompey's Party should be admitted to any Dignity (c.)

Sextia Licinia Lex, the Authors C. Licinius and L. Sextius, Tribunes of the Commons, A. 316, ordaining, That one of the Consuls should be chosen out of the Body of the Commons (d).

Genutia Lex, the Author L. Genutius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 411, making it lawful that both Consuls might be taken out of the Commons (e.)

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator, A. 673, ordaining, That the Prætors should always use the same Method in judicial Processes. For the Prætors used, upon the Entrance on their Office, to put up an Edict to shew what Way they designed to proceed in all Clauses during their Year: These Edicts, which before commonly varied, were by this Law ordered to be always the same, for the preserving a constant and regular Course of Justice (f).

Marcia Lex, the Author Marcus Censorinus, forbidding any Person to bear the Censorship twice (g.)

Clodia Lex, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordering, That the Censors should put no Mark of Infamy on any Person in their general Surveys, unless the Person had been accused and condemned by both the Censors; whereas before they used to punish Persons, by omitting their Names in their Surveys, and by other Means, whether they were accused or no: And what one Censor did, unless the other actually interposed, was of equal Force, as if both had joined in the Action (h.)

Cæcilia Lex, the Author Q. Cæcilius Metellus Pius, Consul with Pompey the Great, A. 701, restoring their ancient Dignity and Power to the Censors, which had been retrenched by the former Law (a).

(a) Plut. in Gracchis. (b) Plin. lib. 7. Quæst. lib. 11. cap. 1. Cæsar. P. 10.

Antonia Lex, the Author M. Antony, a Member of the Triumvirate; ordaining, That for the future, no Proposal should be ever made for the Creation of a Dictator; and that no Person should ever accept of that Office, upon Pain of incurring a capital Penalty (b).

Titia Lex, the Author P. Titius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 710, ordaining, That a Triumvirate of Magistrates, invested with Consular Power, should be settled for five Years, for the regulating the Commonwealth; and that the Honour should be conferred on Octavius, Lepidus, and Antony (c).

Valeria Lex, the Author P. Valerius Poplicola, sole Consul, A. 243, ordaining, That the publick Treasure should be laid up in the Temple of Saturn, and that two Quæstors should be created to supervise it (d).

Junia Sacrata Lex, the Author L. Junius Brutus, the first Tribune of the Commons, A. 260, ordaining, That the Persons of the Tribunes should be sacred: That an Appeal might be made to them from the Determinations of the Consuls: And, That none of the Senators should be capable of that Office (e).

Atinia Lex, the Author Atinius, Tribune of the Commons, ordaining, That any Tribune of the Commons should have the Privilege of a Senator; and, as such, take his Place in the House (f).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornel. Sylla, Dictator, A. 673, taking away from the Tribunes the Power of making Laws, and of interposing, of holding Assemblies and receiving Appeals, and making all, that had borne that Office, incapable of any other Dignity in the Commonwealth (g).

Aurelia Lex, the Author C. Aurelius Cotta, Consul with L. Octavius, A. 678, an Abrogation of some Part of the former Law, allowing the Tribunes to hold their other Offices afterwards (h).

Pompeia Lex, the Author Pompey the Great, Consul with M. Crassus, A. 683, restoring their full Power and Authority to the Tribunes, which had been taken from them by the Cornelian Law (i).

C H A P. XXVII.

LAWS relating to publick Constitutions, Laws, and Privileges.

Hortensia Lex, the Author Q. Hortensia, Dictator, A. 467, ordaining, That whatever was enacted by the Commons, should be observed by the whole Roman People; whereas the Nobility had been formerly exempted from paying Obedience to the Decrees of the Populacy (a).

Cæcilia Didia Lex, the Authors Q. Cæcilius Metellus and T. Didius, Consuls, A. 655, for the regulating the Proceedings in enacting Laws; ordaining, That in one Quæstion (una rogatione) but one single Matter should be proposed to the People, lest, while they give their Suffrage in one Word, they should be forced to assent to a whole Bill, if they liked the greatest Part of it, though they disliked the rest; or throw out a Bill for several Clauses which they did not approve of, though perhaps they would have been willing to pass some Part of it. Requiring also, That, before any Law was preferred at the Comitia, it should be exposed to the publick View three Market-days (tribus nundinis) beforehand (b).

P. Manutius makes the Cæcilian and Didian two distinct Laws; the first Part composing the former, and the other the latter.

Junia Licinia Lex, the Authors D. Junius Silanus and L. Licinius Murena, Consuls, A. 691, ordaining, That such as did not observe the former Law, relating to the Publishing the Draughts of new Bills for three Nundinae, should incur a greater Penalty than the said Law enjoined (c).

Licinia Stentia Lex, the Authors Licinius and Æbutius, Tribunes of the Commons, ordaining, That when any Law was preferred relating to any Charge or Power, not only the Person who brought in the Bill, but likewise his Colleagues in any Office which he already enjoyed, and all his Relations, should be incapable of being invested with the said Charge or Power (d).

Epist. 15. lib. 4. (c) Cic. in Orat. 2. contra Rull. c. in Orat. pro Dom. 13.

Cornelia Lex, the Author G. Cornelius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 686, ordaining, That no Person should, by the Votes of the Senate, be exempted from any Law, (as used to be allowed upon extraordinary Occasions) unless two hundred Senators were present in the House; and that no Person, thus excused by the Senate, should hinder the Bill of his Exemption from being carried afterwards to the Commons for their Approbation (a).

Amplia Labiena Lex, the Authors T. Ampius and T. Labienus, Tribunes of the Commons, A. 693, conferring an honourable Privilege on Labienus, Great, that at the Circensian Games, he should wear a golden Crown, and be habited in the triumphal Robes; and that at the Stage Plays he should have the Liberty of wearing the Prætexta, and a golden Crown (b).

LAWS relating to the Provinces and the Governors of them.

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 630, ordaining, That before the annual Comitia for chusing Consuls, the Senate should, at their Pleasure, determine the particular Consular Provinces, which the new Consuls, when designed, should divide by Lot. As also, that whereas heretofore the Tribunes had been allowed the Privilege of interposing against a Decree of Senate, they should be deprived of that Liberty for the future (a).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator, A. 673, ordaining, That whoever was sent with any Command into a Province, should hold that Command till he returned to Rome; whereas heretofore, their Office was to continue no longer than a set Time; upon the Expiration of which, if no Successor was sent in their Room, they were put to the Trouble and Inconvenience of getting a new Commission from the Senate.

It was a Clause in this Law, that every Governor of a Province, when another was sent to succeed him, should have thirty Days allowed him in order to his Removal (a).

Julia Lex Prima, the Author C. Julius Cæsar, Consul with M. Calpurnius Bibulus, A. 691, comprized under several Heads; as that Achaia, Thessaly, and all Greece, should be entirely free, and that the Roman Magistrate should sit as Judge in those Provinces (b): That the Towns and Villages through which the Roman Magistrates pass towards the Provinces, should be obliged to supply them and their Retinue with Hay and other Conveniencies on the Road (c): That the Governors, when their Office was expired, should leave a Scheme of their Accounts in two Cities of their Provinces, and, at their Arrival at Rome, should deliver in a Copy of the said Accounts at the publick Treasury (d): That the Governors of Provinces should upon no Account accept of a golden Coronet, unless a Triumph had been decreed them by the Senate (e): That no chief Commander should go beyond the Bounds of his Province, or enter on any other Dominions, or lead the Army out, or engage in any War, without the express Order of the Senate or People (f).

Julia Lex Secunda, the Author the same Julius Cæsar, in his Dictatorship, ordaining, That no Prætorian Province should be held above a Year, and no Consular Province more than two Years (g).

Clodia Lex, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordering, That all Syria, Babylon, and Persia, should be committed to Gabinus the Consul; and Macedon, Achaia, Thessaly, Greece, and Ætolia to his Colleague Piso, with the Proconsular Power; and that a Sum should be paid them out of the Treasury to defray the Charges of their March thither with an Army (h).

Patina Lex, the Author P. Vatinius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 694, ordaining, That the Command of all Gallia, Cisalpine, and Illyricum should be conferred on Cæsar for five Years together, without a Decree of Senate, and without the Formality of casting Lots; that the particular Persons mentioned in the Bill, should go with him in the Quality of Legati, without the Deputation of the Senate: That the Army to be sent with him should be paid out of the Treasury; and that he should transplant a Colony into the Town of Novocomum in Gallia (a).

Clodia Lex de Cypro, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordaining, That the Island Cyprus should be reduced into a Roman Province: That Ptolemy King of Cyprus should be publickly exposed to Sale, habited in all regal Ornaments, and his Goods in like Manner sold by Auction: That M. Cato should be sent with the Prætorian Power into Cyprus, to take Care of the selling the King's Effects, and conveying the Money to Rome (b).

Trebonia Lex, the Author L. Trebonius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 698, decreeing the chief Command in Gallia to Cæsar, five Years longer than had been ordered by the Vatinian Law; and so depriving the Senate of the Power of recalling him and substituting another General in his Room (c).

Titia Lex, barely mentioned by Cicero (d), and not explained by Manutius or Rosinus. The Purport of it seems to have been, that the Provincial Quæstors should take their Places by Lot, in the same Manner as the Consuls and Prætors; as may be gathered from the Scope of the Passage in which we find it.

LEGES AGRARIÆ, or Laws relating to the Division of Lands among the People.

Alfia Lex, the Author Sp. Cassius Viscellinus, Consul with Proculus Virginus, A. 267, ordaining, That the Land taken from the Hernici should be divided half among the Latins, and half among the Roman Commons (a). This Law did not hold.

Licinia Lex, the Author C. Licinius Stolo, Tribune of the Commons, A. 277, ordaining, That no Person should possess above five hundred Acres of Land; or keep more than an hundred Head of great, or five hundred Head of small Cattle (b).

Flaminia Lex, the Author C. Flaminius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 525, ordaining, That Picenum, a Part of Gallia, whence the Senones had been expelled, should be divided among the Roman Soldiers (a).

Sempronia Lex prima, the Author T. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 620, confirming the Licinian Law, and requiring all Persons who held more Land than that Law allowed, immediately to resign it into the Commons, to be divided among the poorer Citizens, constituting three Officers to take Care of the Business (b).

This Law being levelled directly against the Interest of the richer Men of the City, who had by Degrees contrived to engross almost all the Land to themselves, after great Heats and Tumults, at last cost the Author his Life.

Sempronia Lex altera, preferred by the same Person, upon the Death of King Attalus, who left the Roman State his Heir: It ordained, That all ready Money found in the King's Treasury should be bestowed on the poorer Citizens, to supply them with Instruments and other Conveniencies required for Agriculture: And that the King's Lands should be farmed at an annual Rent by the Censors; which Rent should be divided among the People (c).

Thoria Lex, the Author Sp. Thorius, Tribune of the Commons, ordaining, That no Person should pay any Rent to the People, of the Lands which he possessed; and regulating the Affair of Grazing and Pasture (d). Two large Fragments of this Law, which was of a great Length, are copied from two old brazen Tables, by Sigonius (e).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator, and Consul with Q. Metellus, A. 673, ordaining, That the Lands of proscribed Persons should be common. This is chiefly to be understood of the Lands of Tuscany, about Volaterræ and Fesula, which Sylla divided amongst his Soldiers (f).

Servilia Lex, the Author P. Servilius Rulius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 690, in the Consulship of Cicero and Antony, containing many Particulars, about selling several Houses, Fields, &c. that belonged to the Publick, for the purchasing Land in other Parts of Italy; about creating ten Men to be Supervisors of the Business, and Abundance of other Heads, several of which are repeated by Cicero in his three Orations extant against this Law, by which he hindered it from passing.

Flavia Lex, the Author L. Flavius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 693, about dividing a sufficient Quantity of Land among Pompey's Soldiers and the Commons (a).

Julia Lex, the Author Julius Cæsar, Consul with Bibulus, A. 691, ordaining, That all the Land in Campania, which used formerly to be farmed at a set Rent of the State, should be divided among the Commons: As also, That all Members of the Senate should swear to confirm this Law, and to defend it against all Opposers. Cicero calls this Lex Campania (b).

Manilia Lex, the Author C. Manilius, Tribune of the Commons, in the Time of the Jugurthine War; ordaining, That in the Bounds of the Lands, there should be left five or six Feet of Ground, which no Person should convert to his private Use, and that Commissioners should be appointed to regulate this Affair (c). From this Law de Limitibus, the Author took the Surname of Limentanus, as he is called by Sallust (d).

LAWs relating to CORN.

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus (not T. Sempronius Gracchus, as Rosinus has it) ordaining, That a certain Quantity of Corn should be distributed every Year among the Commons, so much to every Man: but that they were only to pay the small Consideration of a Sesterterius (a).

Terrentia Cassia Lex, the Authors M. Terrentius and C. Cassius, Consuls, A. 680, ordaining, That a set Price should be given for all Corn bought in the Provinces, to hinder the Exactions of the Quæstors.

Glodia Lex, the Author P. Glodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordaining, That those Quantities of Corn formerly sold to the poor People at six Asses and a Triens the Bushel, should be distributed among them gratis (a).

(a) Plur. Ept. Liv. lib. 60. Vell. Pat. lib. 2. & c. (b)

Hieronica Lex, the Author Hiera, Tyrant of Sicily, regulating the Affair between the Farmers and the Decumani (or Gatherers of the Corn-Tax, which, because it consisted of a tenth Part, they called Decumæ) ordaining the Quantity of Corn, the Price, and the Time of receiving it; which, for the Justice of it, the Romans still continued in Force, after they had possessed themselves of that Island (b).

LAWS for the Regulating of EXPENCES.

Orchia Lex, the Author C. Orchius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 566, defining the Number of Guests which were allowed to be present at any Entertainment (a).

Fannia Lex, the Author C. Fannius, Consul, A. 588, ordaining, That upon the higher Festivals, no Persons should expend more than a hundred Asses in a Day; on ten other Days in every Month, thirty Asses; and at all other Times, ten (b).

Didia Lex, enacted about eighteen Years after the former, ordaining, That the Laws for regulating Expences should reach all the Italians, as well as the Inhabitants of Rome; and that not only the Masters of extravagant Treats, but the Guests too, should incur a Penalty for their Offence (c).

Lex Licinia, the Author P. Licinius Crassus the Rich, agreeing, in most Particulars, with the Fannian Law; and further prescribing, that on the Kalends, Noies, and Nundinæ, thirty Asses should be the most that was spent at any Table; and that on ordinary Days, which were not particularly excepted, there should be spent only three Pounds of dry Flesh, and one Pound of salt Meat; but allowing as much as every Body pleased of any Fruits of the Ground.

extravagant Treats, as for the lowering the Price of Provisions (a).

Emilia Lex, the Author M. Æmilius Lepidus, Consul, about A. 675, respecting the several Sorts of Meats in Use at that Time, and stating the just Quantities allowable of every Kind (b).

Antia Lex, the Author Antius Reffio: A further Essay towards the suppressing of Luxury, the Particulars of which we are not acquainted with. But Macrobius gives us this remarkable Story of the Author, that finding his Constitution to be of very little Force, by Reason of the great Head that Prodigality and Extravagance had gained in the City, he never afterwards supped abroad as long as he lived, for fear he should be forced to be a Witness of the Contempt of his own Injunctions, without being in a Condition to punish it (c).

Julia Lex, preferred in the Time of Augustus, allowing two hundred Sestertii for the Provisions on the Dies Professi, three hundred on the common Festivals in the Kalendar, and a thousand at Marriage Feasts, and such extraordinary Entertainments (d).

A. Gellius further adds, that he finds in an old Author an Edict either of Augustus or Tiberius, (he is uncertain which) raising the Allowance according to the Difference of the Festivals, from three hundred to two thousand Sestertii (e).

Hither may be referred the Lex Oppia, the Author C. Oppius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 540, in the Heat of the second Punick War, ordaining, That no Woman should have above half an Ounce of Gold, wear a party-coloured Garment, or be carried in a Chariot in any City, Town, or to any Place within a Mile's Distance, unless upon the Account of celebrating some sacred Solemnity (f).

LAWS relating to MARTIAL AFFAIRS.

SACRATA Lex Militaris, the Author, probably, M. Valerius Corvus, Dictator, A. 411, ordaining, That no Soldier's Name which had been entered in the Muster-Roll, should be struck out, unless by the Party's Consent: And that no Person, who had been Military Tribune, should execute the Office of Duclor Ordinum (a).

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 630, ordaining, That the Soldiers should receive their Clothes gratis at the publick Charge, without any Diminution of their ordinary Pay: And that none should be obliged to serve in the Army, who was not full seventeen Years old (b).

Maria Porcia Lex, the Authors L. Marius and Porcius Cato, Tribunes of the Commons, A. 691, ordaining, That a Penalty should be inflicted on such Commanders as writ falsely to the Senate, about the Number of the slain on the Enemies Side, and of their own Party: And that they should be obliged, when they first entered the City, to take a solemn Oath before the Quæstors, that the Number which they returned was true, according to the best Computation (c).

Sulpicia Lex, the Author P. Sulpicius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 665, ordaining, That the chief Command in the Mithridatick War, which was then enjoyed by L. Sylla, should be taken from him and conferred on C. Marius (d).

Gabinia Lex, the Author A. Gabinus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 685, ordaining, That a Commission should be granted to Cn. Pompey, for the Management of the War against the Pirates for three Years, with this particular Clause, that upon all the Sea on this Side Hercules's Pillars, and in the Maritime Provinces as far as 400 Stadia from the Sea, he should be empowered to command Kings, Governors and States, to supply him with all the Necessaries in his Expedition (e).

Manilia Lex, the Author C. Manilius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 687, ordaining, That all the Forces of Lucullus, and the Province under his Government, should be given to Pympey; together with Bitbynia, which was under the Command of Glabrio; and that he should forthwith make War upon Mithridates; retaining still the same naval Forces, and the Sovereignty of the Seas, as before (a.)

De Tutelis, or Laws concerning WARDSHIPS.

ATTILIA Lex, the Author and Time unknown, prescribing, That the Prætor, and the major Part of the Tribunes, should appoint Guardians to all such Minors, to whom none had been otherwise assigned (a).

The Emperor Claudius seems to have abrogated this Law, when, as Suetonius informs us, he ordered, that the Assignment of Guardians should be in the Power of the Consuls. (b).

Lætoria Lex, ordaining, That such Persons as were distracted, or prodigally squandered away their Estates, should be committed to the Care of some proper Persons, for the Security of themselves and their Possessions: And that whoever was convicted of defrauding any in those Circumstances, should be deemed guilty of a high Misdemeanor (c).

LAWS concerning Wills, Heirs, and Legacies.

FURIA Lex, the Author C. Furius, Tribune of the Commons, ordaining, That no Person should give, by Way of Legacy, above a thousand Ases, unless to the Relations of the Master who manumized him, and to some other Parties there excepted (a).

VOCANIA Lex, the Author Q. Voconia Saxa, Tribune of the Commons, A. 584, ordaining, That no Woman should be left Heiress to an Estate; and that no Census should, by his Will, give above a fourth Part of what he was worth to a Woman. This seems to have been enacted, to prevent the Decay and Extinction of noble Families (b).

By the Word Census is meant any rich Person, who was rated high in the Censor's Books.

LAWS concerning Money, Usury, &c.

SEMPRONIA Lex, the Author M. Sempronius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 560, ordaining, That, in lending Money to the Allies of Rome and the Latins, the Tenor of the Roman Laws should be still observed, as well as among the Citizens (a).

VALERIA Lex, the Author Valerius Flaccus, Consul with L. Cornelius Cinna, ordaining (to oblige the poorer Part of the City) that all Creditors should discharge their Debtors upon the Receipt of the fourth Part for the whole Sum. This Law, as most unreasonable, is censured by Paterculus (b).

Gabinia

Gabinia Lex, the Author Aul. Gabinius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 685, ordaining, That no Action should be granted for the Recovery of any Money taken up, versurâ factâ, i. e. first borrowed upon a small Use, and then lent out again upon a greater; which Practice was highly unreasonable (a.)

Claudia Lex, the Author Claudius Cæsar; commanding, That no Usurer should lend Money to any Person in his Nonage, to be paid after the Death of his Parents (b.)

Vespasian added a great Strength to this Law, when he ordained, That those Usurers who lent Money to any Filius Familiæ, or Son under his Father's Tuition, should have no Right ever to claim it again, not even after the Death of his Parents (c.)

LAWs concerning the JUDGES.

Sempronia Lex, the Author C. Sempronius Gracchus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 630, ordaining, That the Right of Judging, which had been assigned to the Senatorian Order by Romulus, should be transferred from them to the Equites (a.)

Servilia Lex, the Author Q. Servilius Cæpio, Consul with C. Attilius Serranus, A. 647, abrogating in Part the former Law, and commanding, That the Privilege therein mentioned should be divided between both the Orders of Knights and Senators (b.)

Plutarch and Florus make C. Sempronius Gracchus to have appointed 300 Senators and 600 Equites, for the Management of Judgments; but this seems rather to belong to the Servilian Law, if not totally a Mistake (c.) This Law was soon after repealed.

Livia Lex, the Author M. Livius Drusus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 662, ordaining, That the Judiciary Power should be placed in the Hands of an equal Number of Senators and Knights (a).

But this, among other Constitutions of that Author, was abrogated the very same Year, under Pretence of being made inauspiciously.

Plautia Lex, the Author M. Plautius Silvanus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 664, ordaining, That every Tribe should chuse out of their own Body fifteen Persons to serve as Judges every Year; by this means making the Honour common to all three Orders, according as the Votes carried it in every Tribe (b).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator, A. 673, taking away the Right of Judging entirely from the Knights, and restoring it fully to the Senators (c).

Aurelia Lex, the Author L. Aurelius Cotta, Prætor, A. 653, ordaining, That the Senatorian and Equestrian Orders, together with the Tribuni Ærarii, should share the judicial Power between them (d).

Pompeia Lex, the Author Pompey the Great, Consul with Crassus, A. 698, ordaining, That the Judges should be chosen otherwise than formerly, out of the richest in every Century; yet, notwithstanding, should be confined to the Persons mentioned in the Aurelian Law (e).

Julia Lex, the Author Julius Cæsar, confirming the aforesaid Privilege to the Senators and Knights, but excluding the Tribuni Ærarii (f).

Rofinus sets this Law before that of Pompey; but is very plain it was not made till afterwards.

Antonia Lex, the Author M. Antony, Consul with Julius Cæsar, A. 709, ordaining, That a third Decury of Judges should be added to the two former, to be chosen out of the Centurions (g).

LAWS relating to JUDGEMENTS.

POMPEIA Lex, the Author Pompey the Great, sole Consul, A. 701, forbidding the Use of the Laudatores in Tryals (a).

Memmia Lex, ordaining, That no Person's Name should be received into the Roll of Criminals, who was absent upon the publick Account (b).

Remmia Lex, ordaining, That Persons convicted of Calumny should be stigmatized (c).

Both these Laws sometimes go under the Name of Memmiæ, and sometimes of Remmiæ; the Distinction here observed is owing to P. Manutius.

LAWS relating to CRIMES.

THE Crimes or Actions that tended to the Prejudice of the State, have been already reckoned up, and briefly explained. The Laws on this Subject are very numerous, and, by Reason of their great Usefulness, have been preserved at large in the Labours of the Civilians, with the particular Heads of which they consisted. It will be sufficient to the present Design

Design to mention such as are hinted at in the ordinary Classics, and to speak of those only in general.

DE MAJESTATE.

Gabinia Lex, already described among the Laws relating to Assemblies.

Apuleia Lex, the Author L. Apuleius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 652. It seems to have been enacted for the Restraint of publick Force and Sedition in the City (a). Sigonius thinks, that it was this Law which made the Question de Majestate perpetual.

Varia Lex, the Author L. Varius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 662, ordaining, That all such Persons should be brought to a public Trial, who had any Way encouraged or assisted the Confederates in the late War against Rome (b).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelia Sylla, Dictator, A. 676, making it Treason to lead an Army out of a Province, or to engage in a War without special Orders; to endeavour the ingratiating one's self so with the Army as to make them ready to serve his particular Interest; or to spare or ransom a Commander of the Enemy when taken Prisoner; or to pardon the Captains of Robbers and Pirates; or for a Roman Citizen to reside without Orders at a Foreign Court; and assigning the Punishment of Aquæ & Ignis Interdictio to all that shall be convicted of any of these Crimes (c).

Julia Lex, the Author Julius Cæsar, either in his first Consulship, or after the Pharsalian Victory, ordaining the Punishment mentioned in Sylla's Law to be inflicted on all that were found guilty de Majestate; whereas Sylla intended it only for the Particulars which he there specifies (d).

Antonia Lex, the Author Mark Antony, allowing those who were condemned de Majestate an Appeal to the People; which before was allowed only in the Crime which they called Perduellio, one Part of the Crimen Majestatis, of the most heinous Nature; which the Lawyers define, Hostili animo adversus Rem publicam esse. This Law was repealed by Augustus (e).

De Adulterio & Pudicitia.

Julia Lex, the Author Augustus Cæsar, as Suetonius informs us (a). Juvenal mentions this Law in his second Satyr, and seems to intimate, that it was afterwards confirmed, and put in full Force by the Emperor Domitian; the Rigour of it is there very handsomely expressed.:

————— Leges revocabat amaras (b)
Omnibus, atque ipsis Veneri Martique, timendas.

Scatinia Lex, the Author C. Scatinus Aricinus, Tribune of the Commons; though some think it was called Lex Cantinia, from one Scantinius, Tribune of the Commons; against whom it was put in Execution. It was particularly levelled against the Keepers of Caramites, and against such as prostituted themselves for this vile Service (c). The Penalty enjoined by the Author, was only pecuniary; but Augustus Cæsar made it afterwards capital (d).

Cornelia Lex inter fcarios & veneficos.

The Author Cornelius Sylla, Dictator. It was directed against such as killed another Person with Weapons or Poison; or fired Houses, or took away any Person's Life by false Accusation; with several other Heads.

It was a Clause in this Law, That the Person who stood accused of the Crimes therein mentioned, might have his Choice of letting the Jury give their Verdict Clam vel Palam, by Voices or by Tablets (e).

De Parricidis.

The old Law which proscribed the odd Sort of Punishment proper to this Crime, was restored and confirmed by Pompey the Great, with the Title of Lex Pompeia (f).

Cornelia Lex falsi.

Sylla, the Dictator, as he appointed a proper Prætor to make Inquisition into what they call Crimen falsi, so he enacted this Law as the Rule and Standard in such Judgement (a.) It takes in all Forgers, Concealers, Interliners, &c. of Wills; Counterfeiters of Writs and Edicts; false Accusers, and Corrupters of the Jury; together with those that any Ways debased the public Coin, by shaving or filing the Gold, or adulterating the Silver, or publishing any new Pieces of Tin, Lead, &c. and making those incur the same Penalty (which was Aqua & Ignis interdictio) who voluntarily connived at the Offenders in these Particulars.

Leges de vi.

Plautia, or Platia Lex, the Author, P. Plautius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 675, against those that attempted any Force against the State or Senate; or used any Violence to the Magistrates, or appeared armed in publick upon any ill Design, or forcibly expelled any Person from his lawful Possession. The Punishment assigned to the Convicted was Aqua & Ignis interdictio (b.)

Clodia Lex, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordaining, That all those should be brought to their Trial, who had executed any Citizen of Rome without the Judgement of the People, and the Formality of a Trial (c.)

The Author, being a mortal Enemy of Cicero's, Jewelled this Law particularly against him; who in the Time of the Catilinarian Conspiracy, for the greater Expedition and Security, having taken several of the chief Parties concerned, first imprisoned and afterwards executed them, only upon a Decree of the Senate. Clodius having highly ingratiated himself with the People, by several popular Laws, easily got this Act to pass; and so obliged Cicero to go into Exile.

Pompeia Lex, the Author Pompey the Great, in his third Consulship, A. 701. It was directed especially against the Authors of the late Riot, upon the Account of Clodius and Milo; in which one of the Curie had been set on Fire, and the Palace of Lepidus the Interrex, assaulted by Force. This Law introduced a much shorter Form of Judgement than had been formerly used, ordaining, That the first three Days in every Trial should be spent in hearing and examining Witnesses, and then allowing only one Day for the two Parties to make their formal Accusation and Defence; the first being confined to two Hours, and the other to three. Hence the Author of the Dialogue concerning famous Orators, attributed to Quintilian, or Tacitus, observes, that Pompey was the first who deprived Eloquence of its old Liberty, and confined it to Bounds and Limits (a).

Leges de Ambitu.

Fabia Lex, prescribing the Number of Seclatores, allowed to any Candidate (b). This did not pass.

Acilia Calphurnia Lex, the Authors M. Acilius Glabrio and C. Calphurnius Piso, Consuls, A. 686, ordaining, That, besides the Fine imposed, no Person convicted of this Crime should bear on Office, or come into the Senate (c).

Tullia Lex, the Author M. Tullius Cicero, Consul with C. Antonius, A. 690, ordaining, That no Person, for two Years before he sued for an Office, should exhibit a Show of Gladiators to the People, unless the Care of such a Solemnity had been left to him by Will: That Senators, convicted of the crimen ambitus, should suffer aquæ & ignis interdictio for ten Years; and that the Commons should incur a severer Penalty than had been denounced by the Calphurnian Law (d).

Aufidia Lex, the Author Aufidius Lurco, Tribune of the Commons, A. 692, more severe than that of Tully; having this remarkable Clause, that if any Candidate promised Money to the Tribunes, and did not pay it, he should be excused; but, in case he actually gave it, should be obliged to pay to every Tribune a yearly Fine of 3000 Sestertii (e).

Lex Licinia de Sodalitiis, the Author M. Licinius Crassus, Consul with Cn. Pompey, A. 691, appointing a Greater Penalty than formerly to Offenders of this Kind (f). By Sodalitia they understood an unlawful Making of Parties at Elections; which was interpreted as a Sort of Violence offered to the Freedom of the People. It is strange that this Sense of the Word should have escaped Cooper and Littleton.

Asconius seems to imply, that the Sodalitia and Ambitus were two different Crimes, when he tells us, that Milo was arraigned on those two Accounts, at two several Times, and not before the same Quæstor (g).

Pompeia Lex, the Author Pompey the Great, sole Consul, A. 701. By this it was enacted, That whoever, having been convicted of a Crime of this Nature, should afterwards impeach two others of the same Crime, so that one of them was condemned, should himself, upon that Score, be pardoned. The short Form of Judgment, mentioned in Pompeia Lex de vi, was ordered too by this Law (a).

Julius Cæsar quite ruined the Freedom and fair Proceedings in Elections, when he divided the Right of chusing Magistrates between himself and the People, or rather disposed of all Offices at his Pleasure (b). Hence Lucan:

— Nam quo melius Pharsalicus annus (c)
Consule notus erit? fingit solemnia campus,
Et non admittæ dirimit suffragia Plebis;
Decantatque Tribus, & vana versat in Urna.
Nec cælum servare licet; tonat Augure furdo:
Et lætæ jurantur aves, bubone sinistro.

From what brave Consul could the Year receive
 A surer Mark than Death and Wars shall leave;
 Assemblies are a Jest; and when they meet,
 The gaping Croud is bubbled with a Cheat.
 The Lots are shook, and sorted Tribes advance;
 But Cæsar, not blind Fortune, rules the Chance.
 Nor impious Rome Heaven's sacred Signs obeys,
 While Jove still thunders as the Augurs please:
 And when lest Owls some dire Disaster bode,
 The staving Miscreants, at their Master's Nod,
 Look to the Right, and swear the Omen's good. }

But Augustus restored the old Privilege to the Comitia, and restrained unlawful Courses used in the Canvassing at Elections by several Penalties (d); and published, for this Purpose, the Lex Julia de ambitu, mentioned in the Pandects.

Leges de pecuniis repetundis.

Cæcilia Lex, mentioned by Valerius Maximus (a). Sigonius believes this Law to be the very same with the former, and that either the two Tribunes, Cæcilius and Calphurnius, joined in the Making of it, and so it came to be called either Calphurnia or Cæcilia, at Pleasure; or that in this Place we ought to read Calphurnia, instead of Cæcilia.

Junia Lex, the Author probably M. Junius Pennus, Tribune of the Commons, A. 627, ordaining, That besides the Litis Æstimatio, or Rating of the Damages, the Person convicted of this Crime should suffer Banishment (b).

Servilia Lex, the Author C. Servilius Glaucia, Prætor, A. 653: several Fragments of which are collected from Authors, and transcribed from brazen Tablets by Sigonius (c).

Acilia Lex, the Author M. Acilius Glabrio; in which was this remarkable Clause; That the convicted Person should be allowed neither Ampliatio, nor Comperhendinatio; neither a new Hearing at a set Time prefixed by the Prætor, nor an Adjournment of the Trial, till the third Day after the first Appearing of of the Parties in the Court (d).

Cornelia Lex, the Author L. Cornelius Sylla, Dictator, ordaining, That, besides the Litis Æstimatio, the Person convicted of this Crime should be interdicted the Use of Fire and Water (e).

Julia Lex, the Author L. Julius Cæsar; this kept its Authority through the whole Series of the Emperors, and is still celebrated in the Pandects: A great Part of it was levelled against the Misdemeanors of Provincial Governors; many of which, according to this Law, are alledged against Piso, who had been Proconsul, in Macedonia, by Cicero, in his 37th Oration.

Miscellany Laws not spoken of under the general Heads.

CLODIA Lex de Collegiis, the Author P. Clodius, Tribune of the Commons, A. 695, ordaining, That the Collegia, or Companies of Artificers, instituted by Numa, which had in a great Measure been laid down, should be all revived and observed as formerly, with the Addition of several new Companies (a).

Cæcilia Lex de Jure Italiae, & tributis tollendis, the Author Q. Cæcilius Metellus Nepos, Prætor, A. 693, ordaining, That the Tax called Portoria should be taken off from all the Italian States (b).

Portoria, according to Sigonius's Explication, was a Sort of Toll paid always at the carrying of any exportable Goods to the Haven; whence the Collectors of it were called Portitores.

Lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus.

The Romans, consulting the Grandeur of their Republick, had always a particular Honour for a married State; and nothing was more usual than for the Censors to impose a Fine upon old Bachelors. Dionysius Halicarnassus (c) mentions an old Constitution, by which all Persons of full Age were obliged to marry: But the first Law, of which we have any Certainty, was this of Augustus Cæsar, preferred A. 736. It did not pass before it had received several Amendments, being at first rejected for its extreme Severity. This is the Subject of Propertius's seventh Elegy of the third Book:

Gavisæ est certe sublatam Cynthia legem, &c.

My Cynthia laughed to see the Bill thrown out, &c.

Horace calls it Lex Marita (d).

A. 672, this Law being improved, and enlarged, was preferred in a new Bill by Papius and Poppæus, the Consuls at that Time; whence it is sometimes called Papia Poppæa Lex, and generally Julia Papia.

(a) Cic. pro Sexto; in Plin. pro Domo. Aſcon. in Cornel. (b) Dio, lib. 37. Cu. in Epist. ad Attica. (c) Lib. 9. (d) In Carmine ſeculari.

A great Part of the general Heads are collected by Lipsius, in his Comment on Tacitus (a); among which, the most remarkable are those which contain the Sanctions of Rewards and Punishments.

As to the first of these it was hereby ordained, That all the Magistrates should take Precedence according to their Number of Children, or a married Man before a Batchelor: That in Elections, those Candidates should be preferred who had the most numerous Offspring; and that any Person might stand sooner than ordinary for any Office, if he had as many Children as he wanted Years to be capable of bearing such a Dignity (b): That whoever in the City had three Children, in the other Parts of Italy four, and in the Provinces five, (or, as some say, seven) should be excused from all troublesome Offices in the Place where he lived. Hence came the famous jus trium liberorum, so frequently to be met with in Pliny, Martial, &c. by which the Emperor often obliged such Persons with this Privilege, to whom Nature had denied it.

Of the Penalties incurred by such as in Spight of this Law lived a single Life, the chief was, That unmarried Persons should be incapable of receiving any Legacy or Inheritance by Will, unless from their near Relations; and such as were married, and yet had no Children, above half an Estate. Hence Plutarch has a severe Reflection on the covetous Humour of the Age: That several of the Romans did not marry for the Sake of Heirs to their own Fortunes; but that they themselves might, upon this Account, be capable of inheriting the Estates of other Men (c).

And Juvenal alludes to the same Custom:

Nam Pater es; dedimus quod famæ opponere possis (d).
Jura Parentis habes; propter me scriberis Hæres;
Legatum omne capis, necnon & dulce caducum.

Now by my Toil thou gainst a Father's Fame;
 No more shall pointing Crowds attest thy Shame,
 Nor hooting Boys thy Impotence proclaim.
 Thine is the Privilege our Laws afford
 To him that stands a Father on Record:

Claudia Lex de scribarum negotiatione.

This Law is barely mentioned by Suetonius (a); and seems a Part of the Lex Claudia, or Clodia, about the Trading of the Senators, already explained. It appears, therefore, that not only the Senators, but the Scribes too, or at least those Scribes who assisted the Quæstors, were forbid to make Use of a Vessel of above three hundred Amphoræ: We may reasonably suppose, that this Prohibition was not laid upon them, in respect of their Order and Degree, which were not by any Means eminent; but rather, upon Account of their particular Place or Office: Because it looked very improper, that Persons who were concerned in the publick Accounts, should at the same Time, by dealing in Traffick and Merchandize, endeavour rather the filling their own Coffers, than improving the Revenues of the State (b).

Manilia Lex; this Law, as well as the former, depends upon a single Authority, being just named by Sallust (c), and not explained by Manutius or Rosinus. It seems to have been to this Purpose, that since Affairs had been very often ill managed by the Nobility; those Persons, whose Ancestors had borne no Magistracy in the State, such as they called Homines novi, should, for the future, be allowed the Privilege of holding publick Offices (d).

Atinia Lex de Furtis, ordaining, That no Prescription should secure the Possession of stolen Goods; but that the proper Owner should have an eternal Right to them (e).

PART II. BOOK IV.

Of the ROMAN Art of War.

CHAP. I.

The Levies of the ROMAN Foot.

AT the same Time of the Year, as the Consuls were declared Elect or Design'd, they chose the Military Tribunes, fourteen out of the Body of the Equites, who had served in the Army five Years; and ten out of the Commonalty, such as had made ten Campaigns. The former they call'd Tribuni Juniores, the latter Seniores.

The Consuls having agreed on a Levy, (as in the Time of the Commonwealth they usually did every Year) they issued out an Edict, commanding all Persons who had reached the Military Age (about seventeen Years) to appear (commonly) in the Capitol, or in the Area before the Capitol, as the most sacred and august Place, on such a Day. The People being come together, and the Consuls, who presid'd in the Assembly, having taken their Seats, in the first Place the four and twenty Tribunes were disposed of, according to the Number of Legions they designed to make up, which was generally four. The junior Tribunes were assigned, four to the first Legion, three to the second, four to the third, and three to the last. The senior Tribunes, two to the first Legion and the third; three to the second and last. After this every Tribe, being called out by Lot, was ordered to divide into their proper Centuries; out of each Century were Soldiers cited by Name, with Respect had to their Estate and Class; for which Purpose there were Tables ready at Hand, in which the Name, Age, and Wealth of every Person was exactly described. Four Men as much alike in all Circumstances as could be pitched upon, being presented out of the Century, first the Tribunes of the first Legion chose one, then the Tribunes of the second another, the Tribunes of the third Legion a third Man, and the remaining Person fell to the Tribunes of the fourth. Then four more were drawn out; and now the Right of chusing first belonged to the Tribunes of the second Legion; in the next four to the Tribunes of the third Legion; then to the Tribunes of the fourth Legion, and so round, those Tribunes chusing last the next Time, who chose first the Time before; the most equal and regular Method imaginable.

Cicero has remarked a superstitious Custom observed in these Proceedings: That the first Soldiers pitched upon, should, for the Omen's Sake, be such as had fortunate Names, as Salvius, Valerius, and the like (a).

There were many legal Excuses which might keep Persons from the List; as, in case they were fifty Years old, for then they could not be obliged to serve; or if they enjoyed any Civil or Sacred Office, which they could not conveniently relinquish; or if they had already made twenty Campaigns, which was the Time required for every Foot Soldier; or if, upon Account of extraordinary Merit, they had been, by publick Authority, released from the Trouble of serving for such a Time; or if they were maimed in any Part, and so ought not to be admitted into the Legions; as Suetonius tells us of a Father, who cut off the Thumbs of his two Sons, on Purpose to keep them out of the Army (b). And Valerius Maximus gives a Relation of the like Nature (c).

(a) Cic. de Divinat. lib. 1.
lib. 6. cap. 3.

(b) Sueton. August. cap. 24.

(c) Val. Max.

Otherwise

Otherwise they were necessitated to submit; and in Case of a Refusal, were usually punished either with Imprisonment, Fine, or Stripes, according to the Lenity or Severity of the Consul. And therefore it seems strange that Machiavel should particularly commend the Roman Discipline, upon Account of forcing no one to the Wars, when we have in all Parts of History such large Intimations of a contrary Practice. Nay, we read too of the Conquistadores, or Impres-Masters, who were commissioned, upon some Occasions, to go about and compel Men to the Service of the State.

Valerius Maximus (a) gives us one Example of changing this Custom of taking out every particular Soldier by the Tribunes, for that of chusing them by Lot. And Appianus Alexandrinus (b) acquaints us, that in the Spanish War managed by Lucullus, upon Complaint to the Senate of several unjust Practices in the Levies, the Fathers thought fit to chuse all the Soldiers by Lot. Yet the same Author assures us, that within five Years Time the old Custom returned, of making the Levies in the Manner already described.

However, upon any extraordinary Occasion of immediate Service, they omitted the common Formalities, and, without much Distinction, listed such as they met with, and led them out on an Expedition. These they termed Milites Subitarii.

CHAP II.

The Levy and Review of the CAVALRY.

ROMULUS, having established the Senate, chose three hundred of the stoutest young Men out of the most noble Families to serve on Horseback: But, after the Institution of the Census by Servius Tullius, all those Persons had the Honour of being admitted into the Order of the Equites, who were worth four hundred Sestertia; yet no Man was thus enrolled by the Kings or Consuls, or afterwards by the Censors, unless, besides the Estate required, no Exception could be taken against his Person or Morals. If these were unquestionable, his Name was entered among the Knights, and a Horse and Ring given him him at the publick Charge; he being obliged to appear for the future on Horseback, as often as the State should have Occasion for his Service.

So that there being always a sufficient Number of Equites in the City, there needed only a Review in order to fit them for Service. Learned Men have very little Agreement in this Point; yet we may venture to take Notice of three several Sorts of Reviews, Probatio, Transvectio, and what they termed properly Recessio; though they are usually confounded, and seldom understood.

The Probatio we may conceive to have been a diligent Search into the Lives and Manners of the Equites, and a strict Observation of their Plights of Body, Arms, Horses, &c. This is supposed to have been commonly made once a Year.

Transvectio Lipfius makes the same as Probatio, but he is certainly mistaken; since all the Hints we meet with concerning it in Authors, argue it to have been rather a pompous Ceremony and Procession, than an Examination. The most learned Grævius observes it to have been always made in the Forum (a). Dionysius describes it in the following Manner: The Sacrifices being finished, all those who are allowed Horses at the Expence of the State, ride along in Order, as if returning from a Battle, being habited in the Togæ Palmatæ, or the Trabææ, and crowned with Wreaths of Olive. The Procession begins at the Temple of Mars, without the Walls, and is carried on through all the eminent Parts of the City, particularly the Forum and the Temple of Castor and Pollux. The Number sometimes reaches to five Thousand; every Man bearing the Gifts and Ornaments received, as a Reward of his Valour, from the General. A most glorious Sight, and worthy of the Roman Grandeur (b).

This Solemnity was instituted to the Honour of Castor and Pollux, who, in the Battle with the Latins, about the Year of the City 257, appeared in the Field personally assisting the Romans; and, presently after the Fight, were seen at Rome (just by the Fountain where their Temple was afterwards built) upon Horses all foaming with white frothy Sweat, as if they had rode Post to bring Tidings of the Victory (c).

The proper Recessio was the Account taken by the Censors every Lustrum, when all the People, as well as the Equites were to appear at the General Survey: So that it was only a more solemn and accurate Sort of Probation, with the Addition of enrolling new Names, cancelling old ones, and other Circumstances of that Nature.

Besides all this, it was an usual Custom for the Equites, when they had served out their legal Time in the Wars, to lead their Horse solemnly into the Forum, to the Seat of the two Censors, and there having given an Account of the Commanders under whom they had served, as also the Time, Places, and Actions relating to their Service, they were discharged every Man with Honour or Disgrace, according as he deserved. For this Account we are beholden to Plutarch, who gives a particular Relation how this Ceremony was performed with universal Applause by Pompey the Great.

It might be brought as a very good Argument of the Obscurity and Confusion of these Matters, that, of two very learned Men, one makes this Equi redditio the same as the Probatio (a), the other the same as the Transvectio (b).

——— Non nostrum tantas componere lites.

The Emperors often took a Review of the Cavalry, and Augustus particularly restored the old Custom of the Transvectio; which had before been discontinued for some Time.

It is hard to conceive that all the Roman Horse in the Army should consist of Knights; and for that Reason Sigonius and many other learned Men make a Distinction in the Cavalry, between those who served Equo publico, and those that served Equo privato; the former they allow to have been of the Order of Knights, the latter not. But Grævius and his noble Countryman Schælius have proved this Opinion to be a groundless Conjecture. They demonstrate from the Course of History, that from the Beginning of the Roman State, till the Time of Marius, no other Horse entered the Legions but the true and proper Knights, except in the Midst of public Confusion, when Order and Discipline were neglected.

After that Period, the military Affairs being new modelled, the Knights thought not fit to expose themselves abroad in the Legions, as they had formerly done, but generally kept at Home to enjoy their Estates, and to have a Hand in the Transactions of the City; and their Places in the Army were filled by foreign Horse; or if they ever made Campaigns themselves, they held some Post of Honour and Command. Hence under the Emperors a Man might be a Knight, and have the Honour of a Publick Horse, without ever engaging in the publick Cause, or so much as touching Arms; which Consideration made some Princes lay aside the Custom of allowing the Knights a Horse, and leave them only their Gold Ring to distinguish their Order, as Pliny (a) Senior affirms to have been done in his Time.

CHAP. III.

The MILITARY OATH, and the Levies of the CONFEDERATES.

THE Levies being finished, the Tribunes of every Legion chose out one whom they thought the fittest Person, and gave him a solemn Oath at large, the Substance of which was, that he should oblige himself to obey the Commanders in all Things, to the utmost of his Power, be ready to attend whenever they ordered his Appearance, and never to leave the Army but by their Consent. After he had ended, the whole Legion, passing one by one, every Man in short swore to the same Effect, crying, as he went by, Idem in me.

This and some other Oaths were so essential to the military State, that Juvenal used the Word Sacramenta for Militis or Militiæ, Sat. xvi. 35.

Præmia nunc alia, atque alia emolumenta notemus Sacramentorum.

As to the raising the Confederate Troops, Polybius informs us, that at the same Time as the Levies were made in Rome, the Consuls gave Notice to the Cities of the Allies in Italy, intimating the Number of Forces they should have Occasion to borrow of them, together with the Time and Place when and where they should have them make their Rendezvous. The States accordingly convened their Men, and chusing out their desired Number, gave them an Oath, and assigned them a Commander in Chief, and a Paymaster-General. We may observe, that in the Time of Polybius all Italy was indeed subject to the Romans; yet no State or People in it had been reduced into the Form of a Province; retaining, for the Generality, their old Governors and Laws, and being termed Socii, or Confederates.
and

But, after all, the Italians were not only divided into separate Provinces, but afterwards honoured with the Jus Civitatis; the Name of Socii ceased, all the Natives of Italy being accounted Romans; and therefore, instead of the Social Troops, the Auxilia were afterwards procured, which are carefully to be distinguished from the former. They were sent by foreign States and Princes, at the Desire of the Roman Senate, or Generals, and were allowed a set Pay from the Republic; whereas the Socii received no Consideration for their Service, but a Distribution of Corn.

CHAP. IV.

Of the EVOCATI.

THE most eminent Degree of Soldiers were the Evocati, taken as well out of Allies as Citizens, out of Horse as Foot, not by Force, but at the Request and Intreaty of the Consuls, or other Officers: For which Purpose Letters were commonly dispatched to every particular Man whom they designed thus to invite into their Service. These were old experienced Soldiers, and generally such as had served out their legal Time, or had received particular Marks of Favour as a Reward of their Valour, on which Accounts they were styled Emeriti and Beneficiarii: Scarce any War was undertaken but a great Number of those were invited into the Army, therefore they had the Honour to be reckoned almost equal with the Centurions. In the Field they usually guarded the chief Standard, being excused from all the military Drudgery, of standing on the Watch, labouring in the Works, and other servile Employments.

The

The Emperor Galba gave the same Name of Evocati to a select Band of young Gentlemen of the Equestrian Rank; whom he kept as a Guard in his Palace.

(a) Sutton. in Galb. cap. 10.

CHAP V.

The several Kinds of the Roman Foot, and their Division into Manipuli, Cohorts, and Legions.

THE whole Roman Infantry was divided into four Sorts, Velites, Hastati, Principes, and Triarii.

The Velites were commonly some of the Tiros, or young Soldiers. of mean Condition, and lightly armed. They had their Name a volando, or a velocitate, from their Swiftness and Expedition. They seem not to have been divided into distinct Bodies or Companies, but to have hovered in loose Order before the Army.

The Hastati were so called, because they used in ancient Times to fight with Spears, which were afterwards laid aside, as inconvenient: These were taken out the next in Age to the Velites.

The Principes were generally Men of middle Age, and of greatest Vigour; it is probable that, before the Institution of the Hastati, they used to begin the Fight, whence they borrowed their Name.

The Triarii were commonly Veterans, or hardy old Soldiers, of long Experience and approved Valour. They had their Name from their Position, being marshalled in the third Place, as the main Strength and Hopes of their Party. They are sometimes called Pilarii, from their Weapons the Pila.

Every one of these grand Divisions, except the Velites, composed thirty Manipuli, or Companies; every Manipulus made two Centuries, or Ordines.

Three Manipuli, one of the Hastati, another of the Principes, and a third of the Triarii, composed a Cohors. Among these, one was filled with some of the choicest Soldiers and Officers, obtaining the honourable Title of Prima Cohors.

We

We meet too with the Prætoria Cohors, instituted by Scipio Numantius; selected for the most Part out of the Evocati or Reformades, and obliged only to attend on the Prætor or General: And this gave Original to the Prætoriani, the Life-Guard of the Emperor.

Ten Cohorts made up a Legion; the exact Number of Foot, in such a Battalion, Romulus fixed at three thousand; though Plutarch assures us, that, after the Reception of the Sabines into Rome, he encreased it to six thousand. The common Number afterwards, in the first Times of the Free State, were four thousand: In the War with Hannibal it arose to five thousand. After this, it is probable they sunk to about four thousand, or four thousand two hundred again; which was the Number in the Time of Polybius.

In the Age of Julius Cæsar, we do not find any Legions exceeding the Polybian Number of Men; and he himself expressly speaks of two Legions that did not make above seven thousand between them (a).

The Number of Legions kept in Pay together, was different, according the various Times and Occasions. During the Free State, four Legions were commonly fitted up every Year, and divided between the Consuls: Yet, in Cases of Necessity, we sometimes meet with no less than sixteen or eighteen in Livy.

Augustus maintained a standing Army of twenty-three, or (as some will have it) of twenty-five Legions; but in After-times we seldom find so many.

They borrowed their Names from the Order in which they were raised, as Prima, Secunda, Tertia; but because it usually happened that there were several Primæ, Secundæ, &c. in several Places, upon that Account they took a Sort of Surname besides, either from the Emperors who first constituted them, as Augusta, Claudiana, Galbiana, Flavia, Ulpia, Trajana, Antoniana, or from the Provinces which had been conquered chiefly by their Valour; as Parthica, Scythica, Gallica, Arabica, &c. Or from the Names of the particular Deities, for whom their Commanders had an especial Honour, as Minervia and Apollinaris: Or from the Region where they had their Quarters; as Cretensis, Cyrenaica, Britannica, &c. Or sometimes upon Account of the lesser Accidents; as Adjutrix, Martia, Fulminatrix, Rapax, &c.

(a) Commentar. lib. 5.

C H A P. VI.

The Division of the CAVALRY, and of the ALLIES.

THE Horse required to every Legion was three hundred, divided into ten Turma, or Troops, thirty to a Troop, every Turma making three Decuriæ, or Bodies of Men.

This Number of three hundred they termed Iustus Equitatus, and is understood as often as we meet with Legio cum suo Equitatu, or Legio cum iusto Equitatu. And though we now and then find a different Number, as two hundred in a Place or two of Livy and Cæsar, yet we must suppose this Alteration to have proceeded from some extraordinary Cause, and consequently to be of no Authority against the common Current of History.

The foreign Troops, under which we may now comprize the Socii and Auxiliaries, were not divided, as the Citizens, into Legions, but first into two great Bodies, termed Alæ, or Cornua, and those again into Companies, usually of the same Nature with those of the Romans; though, as to this, we have little Light in History, as being a Matter of small Importance.

We may further remark, that the Forces which the Romans borrowed of the Confederate States were equal to their own in Foot, and double in Horse; though by dispersing and dividing them with great Policy and Caution, they prevented any Design that they might possibly entertain against the natural Forces; for about a third Part of the foreign Horse, and a fifth of the Foot, was separated from the rest, under the Name of Extraordinarii; and a more choice Part of those with the Title of Ablecti.

In the Time of the Emperors, the Auxiliary Forces were commonly honoured with the Name and Constitution of Legions, though the more ancient Appellation of Alæ frequently occurs.

They were called Alæ from their Position in the Army; and therefore we must expect sometimes to find the same Name applied to the Roman Soldiers, when they happened to have the same Stations.

C H A P. VII.

The Officers in the ROMAN Army; and first of the Centurions and Tribunes; with the Commanders of the Horse, and of the Confederate Forces.

THE Military Offices may be divided, according to Lipsius, into proper and common, the first presiding over some particular Part, as the Centurions and Tribunes, the other using an equal Authority over the whole Force, as the Legati and the General.

We cannot have a tolerable Notion of the Centurions, without remembering what has been already delivered: That every one of the thirty Manipuli in a Legion was divided into two Ordines, or Ranks; and consequently the three Bodies of the Hastati, Principes, and Triarii, into twenty Orders apiece, as into ten Manipuli. Now every Manipulus was allowed two Centurions, or Captains; one to each Order or Century: And to determine the Point of Priority between them, they were created at two different Elections. The thirty, who were made first, always took the Precedency of their Fellows, and therefore commanded the Right-hand Orders, as the others did the Left.

The Triarii, or Pilani, being esteemed the most honourable, had their Centurions elected first; next to them the Principes, and afterwards the Hastati; whence they were called primus & secundus Pilus, primus & secundus Princeps, primus & secundus Hastatus; and so on.

Here it may be observed, that primi Ordines is used sometimes in the Historians, for the Centurions of those Orders; and the same Centurions are sometimes stiled Principes Ordinum, and Principes Centurionum.

We may take Notice too, what a large Field there lay for Promotion; first, through all the Orders of the Hastati, then quite through the Principes; and afterwards from the last Order of the Triarii to the Primipilus, the most honourable of the Centurions, and who deserves to be particularly described.

This Officer, besides his Name of Primipilus, went under the several Titles of Dux Legionis, Præfectus Legionis, Primus
N Centu-

Centurionum, and Primus Centurio; and was the Centurion of the Right Hand Order of the first Manipulus of the Triarii or Pilani, in every Legion. He presided over all the other Centurions; and generally gave the Word of Command in Exercises and Engagements, by Order of the Tribunes. Besides this, he had the Care of the Eagle, or chief Standard of the Legion: Hence Aquilæ præfesse is to bear the Dignity of Primipilus; and hence Aquila is taken by Pliny for the said Office; and Juvenal seems to intimate the same:

*Ut locupletum Aquilam tibi Sexagesimus annus
Adferat.* Sat. xiv. 197.

Nor was this Station only honourable, but very profitable too; for he had a special Stipend allowed him, probably as much as a Knight's Estate; and, when he left that Charge, was reputed equal to the Members of the Equestrian Order, bearing the Title of Primipilarius; in the same Manner as those, who had discharged the greatest Civil Offices, were stiled ever after Consulares, Censorii, Prætorii, Quæstorii, and Ædilitii.

The Badge of the Centurion's Office was the Vitis, or Rod, which they bore in their Hand, whence vitem poscere imports the same as to sue for a Centurion's Place. The Evocati too had the Privilege of using the Vitis, as being in all Respects rather superior to the Centurions.

As to the Reason why this Rod should be made of a Vine-branch, an old Scholiast upon Juvenal has a merry Fancy, that Bacchus made use of such a Sceptre in his martial Expedition, and recommended the Use of it to Posterity.

Besides the Centurions, every Manipulus had two Vexillarii, or Ensigns; and every Centurion chose two Optiones, or Succenturiones, to be his Deputies or Lieutenants.

The Tribunes owe their Name and Original to Romulus's Institution, when he chose three Officers in chief of that Nature, out of the three Tribes into which he divided his City. The Number afterwards increased to six in every Legion. They were created, as at first by the Kings, so afterwards by the Consuls for some Time, till about A. U. C. 393. when the People assumed this Right to themselves: And though, in the War with Perseus, King of Macedon, this Privilege was regained by the Consuls (a), yet we find, that in the very same War, it quickly after returned to the People (a). It is probable, that soon after they divided this Power between them, one half of the Tribunes being assigned by the Consuls, the other half elected by the People. The former Sort were termed Rufuli, or Rutuli; because one Rutilius Rufus preferred a Law in their Behalf. The others Comitiati, because they obtained their Command by the publick Votes in the Comitia (b). They were sometimes taken out of the Equestrian and Senatorian Orders: And, in the Time of the Cæsars, most (if not all) of the Tribunes seem to have been either Senators or Knights. Upon which Account, they were divided into the Laticlavii and the Angusticlavii; the latus clavus properly belonged to the former, and the angustus clavus to the latter.

The Business of the Tribunes was to decide all Controversies in the Army; to give the Word to the Watch; besides the Care of the Works and Camp, and several other Particulars, which will fall under our Notice upon some other Occasion.

They had the Honour of wearing a Gold Ring, in the same Manner as the Equites; and because their Office was extremely desired, to encourage and promote as many as possible, their Command lasted but six Months. For the Knowledge of both these Customs, we are beholden to one Verse of Juvenal, Sat. vii. 89.

Semestri vatum digitos circumligat auro.

Every Turma, or Troop of Horse, had three Decurions, or Captains of Ten; but he that was first elected commanded the Troop; and the others were but his Lieutenants; though every one of the Decurions had an Optio, or Deputy, under him.

As to the Confederate or foreign Force, we are not certain how the smaller Bodies of them were commanded; but it seems most probable, that the Romans generally marshalled them according to their own Discipline, and assigned them Officers of the same Nature with those of the Legions. But the two Alæ, or great Divisions of the Allies, we are assured had each a Præfekt appointed them by the Roman Consul, who governed in the same Manner as the Legionary Tribunes.

C H A P. VIII.

The Legati, and the Imperator, or General.

THE Design of the Legati, at their first Institution, was not so much to command as to advise: The Senate selecting some of the oldest and most prudent Members to assist the General in his Councils. Dionysius calls this The most honourable and sacred Office among the Romans, bearing not only the Authority of a Commander, but, withal, the Sanctity and Veneration of a Priest (a). And he and Polybius give them no other Name than Πρεσβύται, Πρεσβύται καὶ σύμβουλοι, Elders, or Elders and Counsellors.

They were chose commonly by the Consuls; the Authority of the Senate concurring with their Nomination: Though this was sometimes slighted, or contradicted, as appears from Cicero, in his Orations for Sextus, and against Vatinius.

They commanded in Chief under the General, and managed all Affairs by his Permission, whence Cæsar calls their Power Opera fiduciaria (b). And when the Consul or Proconsul was absent, they had the Honour to use the Fasces, and were entrusted with the same Charge as the Officer whom they represented.

As to the Number of the Legati, we have no Certainty; but we may suppose this to have depended upon the Pleasure of the General, and upon the Nature and Consequence of the Affair in which they were engaged: However, we have tolerable Ground to assign one to every Legion.

Under the Emperors, there were two Sorts of Legati, Consulares and Prætorii; the first of which commanded whole Armies, as the Emperor's Lieutenant-Generals; and the other only particular Legions.

The General excelled all other Officers, not only because he had the chief Command of the whole Army, Horse and Foot, Legions and Auxiliaries; but especially as he was allowed the Auspicia, or the Honour of taking Omens, by Help of the Divines, which made a very solemn Ceremony in all martial Expeditions. Hence they were said, gerere rem suis auspiciis, and suis diviis : This was most properly applied, when they did not act in Person : As Suetonius, when he reckons up the Conquests of Augustus, expresses himself, Domuit autem partim ductu, partim auspiciis suis, &c. (a).

Machiavel (b) highly extols the Wisdom of the Romans in allowing their Generals unlimited Commissions, by which they were empowered to fight or not to fight ; to assault such a Town, or to march another Way, without Controul ; the Senate reserving to themselves only the Power of making Peace, and decreeing War, unless upon extraordinary Occasions. This was several Times the Cause of remarkable Victories, that in all Probability had been otherwise prevented. Thus when Fabius Maximus had given the Tuscans a considerable Defeat at Sutrium, and entered on a Resolution to pass the Ciminian Forest, a very dangerous and difficult Adventure ; he never staid to expect farther Orders from Rome, but immediately marched his Forces into the Enemy's Country, and, at the other Side of the Forest, gave them a total Overthrow. In the mean Time, the Senate, fearing he might venture on such a hazardous Attempt, sent the Tribunes of the Commons, with other Officers, to desire Fabius, that he would not by any Means think of such an Enterprize ; but not arriving till he had effected his Design, instead of hindering his Resolution, they returned home with the joyful News of his Success (c).

The Setting out of the General was attended with great Pomp and Superstition. The publick Prayers and Sacrifices for his Success being finished, he, habited in a rich Paludamentum, a Robe of Purple or Scarlet, interwoven with Gold, began his March out of the City, accompanied with a vast Retinue of all Sexes and Ages ; especially, if the Expedition were undertaken against any potent or renowned Adversary ; all Persons being desirous to see and follow with their Wishes, him on whom all their Hopes and Fortunes depended.

It it would not be too minute, we might add a Description of the Generals led Horses, with their rich Trappings of Purple and Cloth of Gold ; such as Dionysius tells us they brought to honest Quintius, the Dictator, in Lieu of those he had left with his Plough : Or, as that of Pompey the Great, which Plutarch mentions to have been taken by the Enemy in the War with Sertorius.

(a) Suet. in Aug. c. 21. (b) Machiavel's Discourse on L.v. (c) Liv. l. 9.

The old Romans had one very superstitious Fancy in Reference to the General, that if he would consent to be devoted or sacrificed to Jupiter, Mars, the Earth, and the infernal Gods, all the Misfortunes, which otherwise might have happened to his Party, would, by virtue of that pious Act, be transferred on their Enemies. This Opinion was confirmed by several successful Instances, and particularly in the most renowned Family of the Decii; of whom the Father, Son, and Grandson, all devoted themselves for the Safety of their Armies: The first being Consul with Manlius, in the War against the Latins; and perceiving the Left Wing, which he commanded, to give back, he called out to Valerius, the High Priest, to perform on him the Ceremony of Consecration, which we find described by Livy in his Eighth Book, and immediately spurred his Horse into the thickest of the Enemy's Forces, where he was killed, and the Roman Army gained the Battle. His Son died in the same Manner in the Tuscan War, and his Grandson in the War with Pyrrhus; in both which the Romans were successful. Juvenal has left them this deserved Encomium in his Eighth Satyr, 254.

*Plebeia Deciorum animæ, plebeia fuerunt
Nomina: pro totis Legionibus hi tamen, & pro
Omnibus auxiliis, atque omni pube Latina
Sufficiunt Diis Infernis Terræque Parenti:
Pluris enim Decii quam qui servantur ab illis.*

From a mean Stock the pious Decii came,
Small their Estates, and vulgar was their Name;
Yet such their Virtue, that their Loss alone
For Rome and all our Legions could atone:
Their Country's Doom they by their own retriev'd,
Themselves more worth than all the Host they sav'd.

[Mr. Stepney.]

C H A P. IX.

Of the ROMAN Arms and Weapons.

FOR the Knowledge of this Subject, we need not take up with the common Division into Offensive and Defensive, but rather rank them both together, as they belonged to the several Sorts of Soldiers already distinguished.

As to the Velites, their Arms were the Spanish Swords, which the Romans thought of the best Shape and Temper, and fittest for Execution, being something like the Turkish Scimeters, but more sharp at the Point.

Hastæ, or Javelins, seven in Number to every Man, very light and slender.

Parma, a Kind of round Buckler, three Feet in Diameter, of Wood covered with Leather.

Galea, or Galerus, a light Casque for their Head, generally made of the Skin of some wild Beast, to appear the more terrible. Hence Virgil, Æn. vii. 688.

— Fulvosque lupi de pelle galeros.

and Propertius, iv. xi. 20.

Et galea hirsuta compta lupina juba.

It seems probable, that after the Time when the Socii were admitted into the Roman Legions, the particular Order of the Velites was discontinued, and some of the youngest Soldiers were chose out, upon Occasion, to skirmish before the main Body. Hence we find, among the light Forces in the Times of the Emperors, the Sagittarii and Funditores, the Darters and Slingers, who never constituted any Part of the proper Velites. And so, before the Institution of the Velites, we meet with the Ruarii, whom Sallust calls Ferentarii, who performed the same Duty, with several Sorts of Weapons.

Some attribute the like Employments to the Accensi; but these were rather supernumerary Recruits, or a Kind of Sergeants in the more ancient Armies.

The Armies of the Hastati, Principes, and Triarii, were in a great Measure the same; and therefore Polybius has not divided them in his Description, but speaks of them all together.

Their Sword was the same as that of the Velites; nor need we observe any Thing more about it, only that the Roman Soldiers used commonly to wear it on their right Side, that it might not hinder their Shield, though they are often represented otherwise in ancient Monuments.

Their other Arms, worth our Notice, were the Scutum, the Pilum, the Galea, and the Lorica.

The Scutum was a Buckler of Wood, the Parts being joined together with little Plates of Iron, and the whole covered with a Bull's Hide: An Iron Plate went about it without, to keep off Blows, and another within, to hinder it from taking any Damage by lying on the Ground: In the Middle was an Iron Boss or Umbo, jutting out, very serviceable to glance off Stones and Darts, and sometimes to press violently upon the Enemy, and drive all before them. They are to be distinguished from the Clypei, which were less, and quite round, belonging more properly to other Nations; though, for some Time, used by the Romans. The Scuta themselves were of two Kinds; the Ovata, and the Imbricata; the former is a plain oval Figure; the other oblong, and bending forward, like a half Cylinder. Polybius makes the Scuta four Feet long, and Plutarch calls them ωδινηται, reaching down to the Feet (a). And it is very probable, that they covered almost the whole Body, since in Livy we meet with Soldiers who stood on the Guard, sometimes sleeping with their Head laid on their Shield, having fixed the other Part of it on the Earth (b).

The Pilum was a missive Weapon, which, in a Charge, they darted at the Enemy. It was commonly four-square, but sometimes round, composed of a Piece of Wood about three Cubits long, and a Slip of Iron of the same Length, hooked and jagged at the End. They took Abundance of Care in joining the two Parts together, and did it so artificially, that it would sooner break in the Iron itself than in the Joint. Every Man had two of these Pila; and this Number the Poet alludes to:

Bina manu lato crispans hostilia ferro. Virg. Æn. i. 317.

*Quæ duo sola manu gestans acclivis monti
Fixerat, intorquet jacula.* Statius, Thebaid. ii.

(a) Plut. in Numeris.

(b) Liv. lib. 44.

C. Marius,

C. Marius, in the Cimbrian War, contrived these Pila after a new Fashion: For before, where the Wood-way joined to the Iron, it was made fast with two Iron Pins: Now Marius let one of them alone as it was, and pulling out the other, put a weak wooden Peg in its Place; contriving it so, that, when it was struck in the Enemy's Shield, it should not stand outright, as formerly; but, the wooden Peg breaking, the Iron should bend, and so the Javelin sticking fast by its crooked Point, should weigh down the Shield (a).

The Galea was a Head-piece or Morion, coming down to the Shoulders, commonly of Brass: Though Plutarch tells us, that Camillus ordered those of his Army to be Iron, as the stronger Metal (b). The lower Part of this they called Buccula, as we have it in Juvenal:

— Fraëta de casside Buccula pendens. Sat. x. 134.

A chap-fall'n Beaver loosely hanging by
The Cloven Helm. —

On the Top was the Crista, or Crest, in adorning of which the Soldiers took great Pride. In the Time of Polybius, they wore Plumes of Feathers dyed of various Colours, to render themselves beautiful to their Friends, and terrible to their Enemies, as the Turks do at present. But in most of the old Monuments we find the Crests represented otherwise, and not much different from those on the Top of our modern Head-pieces. Virgil mentions the Feathers on a particular Occasion:

Cujus olorinæ surgunt de vertice pennæ. Æn. x. 187.

And he describes Mercutius's Crest, as made of a Horse's Mane:

Cristaque, hirsutus equina. Æn. x. 869.

But whatever the common Soldiers had for their Crest, those of the Officers were more splendid and curious; being usually worked in Gold or Silver, and reaching quite cross the Helmet, for Distinction-sake. If we might speak of those of Foreign Commanders, the Crest of King Pyrrhus, as very singular, would deserve our Remark; which Plutarch describes as made of two Goats Horns (c).

(a) Plut. in Mario. (b) Idem. in Camillo. (c) Idem. in Pyrrho.

The Lorica was a Brigantine, or Coat of Mail, generally made of Leather, and worked over with little Hooks of Iron, and sometimes adorned with small Scales of thin Gold; as we find in Virgil:

Loricam confertam hamis.

Æn. iii. 467.

And,

Nec duplici squama lorica fidelis & auro.

Æn. ix. 707.

Sometimes the Loricæ were a Sort of Linen Cassocks, such as Suetonius attributes to Galba, and like that of Alexander in Plutarch; or those of the Spanish Troops described by Polybius in his Account of the Battle of Cannæ.

The poorer Soldiers, who were rated under a thousand Drachmas, instead of this Brigantine wore a Pectorale, or Breast-plate of thin Brass, about twelve Fingers square; and this, with what has already been described, rendered them completely armed; unless we add Ocreæ or Greaves, which they wore on their Legs; which perhaps they borrowed (as many other Customs) from the Græcians, so well known by the Title of ————— Εὐκνήμιδες Ἀχαιοί.

In the elder Times of the Romans, their Horse used only a round Shield, with a Helmet on their Head, and a Couple of Javelins in their Hands; great Part of their Body being left without Defence. But as soon as they found the great Inconveniencies to which they were hereby exposed, they began to arm themselves like the Græcian Horse, or much like their own Foot, only their Shield was a little shorter and squarer, and their Lance or Javelin thicker, with Spikes at each End, that, if one mis-carried, the other might be serviceable.

C H A P. XVI.

The Order of the ROMAN Army drawn up in Battalia.

WHEN the Officers marshalled the Army in order to an Engagement, the Hastati were placed in the Front in thick and firm Ranks; the Principes behind them, but not altogether so close; and after them the Triarii, in so wide and loose an Order, that, upon Occasion, they could receive both the Principes and the Hastati into their Body in any Distress. The Velites, and in later Times the Bowmen and Slingers, were not drawn up in this regular Manner, but disposed of either before the Front of the Hastati, or scattered up and down among the void Spaces of the same Hastati, or sometimes placed in two Bodies in the Wings; but wherever they were fixed, these light Soldiers began the Combat, skirmishing in flying Parties with the first Troops of the Enemy. If they prevailed, which very seldom happened, they prosecuted the Victory; but upon a Repulse they fell back by the Flanks of the Army, or rallied again in the Rear. When they were retired, the Hastati advanced against the Enemy; and in case they found themselves overpowered, retiring softly toward the Principes, fell into the Intervals of their Ranks, and together with them renewed the Fight. But if the Principes and the Hastati thus joined were too weak to sustain the Fury of the Battle, they all fell back into the wider Intervals of the Triarii, and then all together being united into a firm Mass, they made another Effort much more impetuous than any before: If this Assault proved ineffectual, the Day was entirely lost, as to the Foot, their being no further Reserves.

This Way of marshalling the Foot was exactly like the Order of Trees which Gardeners call the Quincunx; which is admirably compared to it in Virgil (a):

*Ut sæpe ingenti bello cum longa cohortes
Explicuit Legio, & campo silet agmen aperto.*

(a) Geor. i. 279.

*Direſſæque acies, ac late fluctuat omnis

As Legions in the Field their Front diſplay,
 To try the Fortune of ſome doubtful Day,
 And move to meet their Foes with ſober Pace,
 Strict to their Figure, tho' in wider Space,
 Before the Battle joins, while from afar
 The Field yet glitters with the Pomp of War ;
 And equal Mars, like an impartial Lord,
 Leaves all to Fortune, and the Dint of Sword ;
 So let thy Vines in Intervals be ſet,
 But not their rural Diſcipline forget,
 Indulge their Width, and add a roomy Space,
 That their extremelt Lines may ſcarce embrace.
 Nor this alone t'indulge a vaſt Delight,
 And make a pleaſing Proſpect for the Sight :
 But for the Ground itſelf, this only Way

 Which crowded, want the Room their Branches to diſplay. }
[Mr. Dryden.

And as the Reaſon of that Poſition of the Trees is not only for Beauty and Figure, but that every particular Tree may have Room to ſpread its Roots and Boughs, without entangling and hindering the Reſt ; ſo in this ranking of the Men, the Army wa's not only ſet out to the beſt Advantage, and made the greateſt Show, but every particular Soldier had free Room to uſe his Weapons, and to withdraw himſelf between the void Spaces behind him, without occaſioning any Confuſion or Diſturbance.

The Stratagem of rallying thus three Times has been reckoned almoſt the whole Art and Secret of the Roman Diſcipline ; and it was almoſt impoſſible it ſhould prove unſucceſſful, if duly obſerved : For Fortune, in every Engagement, muſt have failed them three ſeveral Times, before they could be routed ; and the Enemy muſt have had the Strength and Reſolution to overcome them in three ſeveral Encounters, for the Deciſion of one

one Battle; whereas most other Nations, and even the Græcians themselves, drew up their whole Army, as it were, in one Front, trusting themselves and Fortunes to the Success of a single Charge.

The Roman Cavalry was posted at the two Corners of the Army, like the Wings on a Body, and fought sometimes on Foot, sometimes on Horseback, as Occasion required, in the same Manner as our Dragoons: The confederate, or auxiliary Forces, composed the two Points of the Battle, and covered the whole Body of the Romans.

As to the Stations of the Commanders, the General commonly took up his Post near the Middle of the Army, between the Principes and the Triarii, as the fittest Place to give Orders equally to all the Troops. Thus Virgil disposes of Turnus:

——— Medio dux agmine Turnus
Vertitur Arma tenens.——— Æn. ix. 28.

The Legati and Tribunes were usually posted by him; unless the former were ordered to command the Wings, or the others some particular Part of the Army.

The Centurions stood every Man at the Head of his Century, to lead them up; though sometimes out of Courage and Honour they exposed themselves in the Van of the Army; as Sallust reports of Catiline, that he posted all his choice Centurions, with the Evocati, and the Flower of the common Soldiers, in the Front of the Battle. But the Primpili, or chief Centurions, had the Honour to stand with the Tribunes, near the General's Person.

The common Soldiers were placed in several Ranks, at the Discretion of the Centurions, according to their Age, Strength, and Experience, every Man having three Feet square allowed him to manage his Arms in: And it was most religiously observed in their Discipline, never to abandon their Ranks, or break their Order upon any Account.

But besides the common Methods of drawing up this Army, which are sufficiently explained by every Historian of any Note, there were several other very singular Methods of forming their Battle into odd Shapes, according to the Nature of the Enemy's Body.

Such as the Cuneus; when an Army was ranged in the Figure of a Wedge, the most proper to pierce and break the Order of the the Enemy. This was otherwise called Caput porcinum, which, in some Measure, it resembled.

The Globus; when the Soldiers cast themselves into a firm, round Body, practised usually in Cases of Extremity.

The Forfex, an Army drawn up, as it were, into the Form of a Pair of Sheers. It seems to have been invented on purpose to receive the Cuneus, in Case the Enemy should make Use of that Figure. For while he endeavoured to open, and as it were to cleave their Squadrons with his Wedge, by keeping their Troops open like their Sheers, and receiving him in the Middle, they not only hindered the Damage designed to their own Men, but commonly cut the adverse Body in Pieces.

The Pyrgus, an oblong square Figure, after the Fashion of a Tower, with very few Men in a File, and the Files extended to a great Length. This seems of very ancient Original, as being mentioned in Homer :

Οἱ δὲ τε πυρῆδον σφῆας αὐτὰς αὐτόναυλις. Iliad. μ. 43.

The Serra, or Saw, when the first Companies in the Front of the Army, beginning the Engagement, sometimes proceeded, and sometimes drew back; so that, by the Help of a large Fancy, one might find some Resemblance between them and the Teeth of that Instrument.

The Ensigns and Colours; the Musick; the Word in Engagements; the Harangues of the General.

THERE are several Things still behind, relating to the Army, very observable, before we come to the Camp and Discipline; such as the Ensigns, the Musick, the Word or Sign in Engagements, and the Harangues of the General.

As to the Ensigns, they were either proper to the Foot or to the Horse. Ensigns, belonging to the Foot, were either the common one of the whole Legion, or the particular ones of the several Manipuli.

The common Ensign of the whole Legion was an Eagle of Gold or Silver, fixed on the Top of a Spear, holding a Thunderbolt in her Talons, as ready to deliver it. That this was not peculiar to the Romans is evident from the Testimony of Xenophon, who informs us, that the Royal Ensign of Cyrus was a golden Eagle spread over a Shield, and fastened on a Spear; and that the same was still used by the Persian Kings (a).

What the Ensigns of the Manipuli formerly were, the very Words point out to us; for, as Ovid expresses it,

*Pertica suspensas portabat longa Maniplos,
Unde Manipularis nomina miles habet.*

Manipulus properly signifies a Whisp of Hay, such as in ruder Times the Soldiers carried on a Pole for an Ensign.

But this was in the rustick Age of Rome: Afterwards they made use of a Spear with a transverse Piece on the Top, almost like a Cross; and sometimes with a Hand on the Top, in Allusion to Manipulus: Below the transverse Part was fastened one little orbicular Shield, or more, in which they sometimes placed the smaller Images of the Gods, and, in later Times, of the Emperors.

(a) De Instit. Cyri, lib. 7.

Augustus ordered a Globe fastened on the Head of a Spear to serve for this Use, in Token of the Conquest of the whole World.

The Ensign of the Horse was not selid as the others, but a Cloth, almost like our Colours, spread on a Staff. On these were commonly the Names of the Emperors, in Golden or Purple Letters.

The religious Care the Soldiers took of the Ensigns, was extraordinary; they worshipped them, swore by them, and incurred certain Death if they lost them. Hence it was an usual Stratagem, in a dubious Engagement, for the Commanders to snatch the Ensigns out of the Bearers Hands, and throw them among the Troops of the Enemy, knowing that their Men would venture the extremest Danger to recover them.

As for the several Kinds of Standards and Banners, introduced by the later Emperors, just before Christianity, and afterwards, they do not fall under the present Enquiry, which is confined to the more flourishing and vigorous Ages of the Commonwealth.

The Romans used only Wind-Musick in their Army; the Instruments which served for that Purpose, may be distinguished into the Tuba, the Cornua, the Buccina, and the Litui.

The Tuba is supposed to have been exactly like our Trumpet, running on wider and wider in a direct Line to the Orifice.

The Cornua was bent almost round; they owe their Name and Original to the Horns of Beasts, put to the same Use in the ruder Ages.

The Buccina seem to have had the same Rise, and may derive their Name from Bos and Cuns. It is very hard to distinguish these from the Cornua, unless they were something less, and not quite so crooked: Yet it is most certain that they were of a different Species; because we never read of the Cornua in Use with the Watch or Centinels, but only these Buccina.

The Litui were a middle Kind between the Cornua and the Tuba, being almost straight, only a little turning in at the Top, like the Lituus, or sacred Rod of the Augur, whence they borrowed their Name.

The Instruments being all made of Brass, the Players on them went under the Name of Fincatores, besides the particular Terms of Tubicines, Cornicines, Buccinatores, &c. and there seems to have been a set Number assigned to every Manipulus and Turma; besides several of a higher Order, and common to the whole Legion. In a Battle, the former took their Station by the Ensign, or Colours, of their particular Company, or Troop: The others stood near the chief Eagle in a Ring, hard by the General and prime Officers; and when the Alarm was to be given, at the Word of the General, these latter began it, and were followed by the common Sound of the Rest, dispersed through the several Parts of the Army.

the

Besides this Classicum, or Alarm, the Soldiers gave a general Shout at the first Encounter (a), which in latter Ages they called Barritus, from a German Original.

This Custom seems to have risen from an Instinct of Nature, and is attributed to almost all Nations that engaged in any martial Action; as by Homer to the Trojans; by Tacitus to the Germani; by Livy to the Gauls; by Quintus Curtius to the Macedonians and Persians; by Thucydides, Plutarch, and other Authors, to the Gracians. Polyænus honours Pan with the Invention of the Device, when he was Lieutenant-General to Bacchus in the Indian Expedition; and, if so, we have a very good Original for the Terrores Panici, or Panick Fears, which might well be the Consequence of such a dismal and surprising Clamour. The Romans made an Addition to this Custom, at the same Time clashing their Arms with great Violence, to improve the Strength and Terror of the Noise. This they called Cmcussio Armorum.

Our famous Milton has given a noble Description of it, as used by the rebel Angels after their Leader's Speech for the Renewing of the War:

He spake: And to confirm his Words, out flew Millions of flaming Swords, drawn from the Thighs
Of mighty Cherubims; the sudden Blaze
Far round illumin'd Hell: Highly they rag'd
Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped Arms,
Clash'd on their sounding Shields the Din of War,
Hurling Defiance toward the Vault of Heaven.

Parad. Lost, B. 1.

The Signs of Battle, besides the Classicum, were either a Flag or Standard, erected for that Purpose, which Plutarch, in two several Places, calls a Purple Robe; or more properly some

(a) Coll. Novæ. Artic. lib. 1. cap. 12.

Word or Sentence communicated by the General to the chief Officers, and by them to the whole Army. This commonly contained some good Omen; as, Felicitas, Libertas, Victoria, Fortuna Caesaris, and the like; or else the Name of some Deity, as Julius Caesar used Venus Genetrix; and Augustus, Apollo. The old Tessera, put to this Use, seems to have been a Sort of Tally delivered to every Soldier to distinguish him from the Enemy; and perhaps on that they used to inscribe some particular Word or Sentence, which afterwards they made use of without the Tally.

One great Encouragement, which the Soldiers received in their Entrance on any Adventure, was from the Harangue of the General; who, upon the Undertaking an Enterprize, had a Throne erected with green Turf, surrounded with the Fasces, Ensigns, and other military Ornaments, from whence he addressed himself to the Army, put them in mind of the noble Achievements of their Ancestors, told them their own Strength, and explained to them the Order and Force of the Enemy; raising their Hopes with the glorious Rewards of Honour and Victory, and dissipating their Fears by all the Arguments that a natural Courage and Eloquence could suggest: This was termed Alloentio. Which Custom, though now laid aside as antiquated and useless, yet is highly commended in the ancient Discipline, and, without Doubt, has been often the Cause of extraordinary Successes, and the Means of stifling Sedition, hindering rash Action, and preventing many unfortunate Disorders in the Field.

C H A P. XII.

The Form and Division of the ROMAN Camp.

THE Romans were more exact in nothing than in forming their Camp: and two very great Commanders, Philip of Macedon, and King Pyrrhus, upon View of their admirable Order and Contrivance herein, are reported to have expressed the greatest Admiration imaginable of the Roman Art, and to have thought them more than Barbarians, as the Græcians termed all People besides themselves.

Before

ICONISMUS ACIEI VULGATÆ

Before we take a particular Prospect of the Camp, we had best distinguish between the Castra Æstiva, and Castra Hyberna: The former were sometimes light and moveable, so that they might be set up or taken down in a Night, and then they called them simply Castra. At other Times, when they designed to continue long in their Encampments, they took more Pains to fortify and regulate them, for the Convenience and Defence of their Men; and then they termed them Castra Stativa.

As for the Hyberna, or Winter-Quarters, they were commonly taken up in some City or Town, or else so built and contrived as to make almost a Town of themselves. And hence the Antiquarians observe, that the modern Towns, whose Names end in castr, were originally these Castra Hyberna of the Romans.

The Figure of the Roman Camp was four-square, divided into two chief Partitions, the Upper and the Lower. In the Upper Partition were the Pavilion of the General and the Lodgments of the chief Officers: In the Lower were disposed the Tents of the common Soldiers, Horse and Foot.

The General's Apartment, which they called Prætorium (because the ancient Latins stiled all their Commanders Prætores) seems to have been of a round Figure: The chief Parts of it were the Tribunal, or General's Pavilion; the Augurale set aside for Prayers, Sacrifices, and other religious Uses; the Apartments of the young Noblemen, who came under the Care of the General, to inform themselves in the Nature of the Countries, and to gain some Experience in military Affairs: These Gentlemen had the honourable Title of Imperatoris Contubernales.

On the right Side of the Prætorium stood the Quæstorium, assigned to the Quæstor, or Treasurer of the Army, and hard by the Forum; serving not only for the Sale of Commodities, but also for the Meeting of Councils, and giving Audience to Ambassadors: This is sometimes called Quintana.

On the other Side of the Prætorium were lodged the Legati, or Lieutenant Generals: And below the Prætorium the Tribunes took up their Quarters by Six and Six, opposite to their proper Legions, to the End they might the better govern and inspect them.

The Præfetti of the foreign Troops were lodged at the Sides of the Tribunes, over against their respective Wings: Behind these were the Lodgments of the Evocati, and then those of the Extraordinarii and Abletti Equites, which concluded the higher Part of the Camp.
O 2 these

Between the two Partitions was included a Spot of Ground, about an hundred Feet in Length, which they called Principia, where the Altars and Statues of the Gods, and (perhaps) the chief Ensigns, were fixed all together.

The Middle of the lower Partition, as the most honourable Place, was assigned to the Roman Horse; and next to them were quartered the Triarii, then the Principes; close by them the Hastati, afterwards the foreign Horse; and in the last Place the foreign Foot.

But the Form and Dimensions of the Camp cannot be so well described any other Way, as in a Table where they are exposed to View. However, we may remark two great Pieces of Policy in the Way of disposing the Confederates: For, in the first Place, they divided the whole Body of Foreigners, placing Part in the highest Partition of the Camp, and Part in the lower, and then the Matter was ordered, so that they should be spread in thin Ranks round the Troops of the State: So that the latter, possessing the middle Space, remained firm and solid, while the others were Masters of very little Strength, being separated at so vast a Distance from one another, and lying just on the Skirts of the Army.

The Romans fortified their Camp with a Ditch and Parapet, which they termed Fossa and Vallum: In the last some distinguish two Parts, the Agger and the Sudes. The Agger was no more than the Earth cast up from the Vallum; and the Sudes were a Sort of wooden Stakes to secure and strengthen it.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Duties, Works, and Exercises of the Soldiers.

THE Duties and Works of the Soldiers consisted chiefly in their Watches and Guards, and their Diligence in casting up Intrenchments and Ramparts, and such other laborious Services.

The

The Watches and Guards were divided into the Excubie and the Vigilie: The first kept by Day, and the other by Night.

As to the Excubie, they were kept either in the Camp, or at the Gates and Intrenchments. For the former, there was allowed a whole Manipulus to attend before the Prætorium; and four Soldiers to the Tent of every Tribune.

The Triarii, as the most honourable Order, were excused from the ordinary Watches, yet being placed exactly opposite to the Equites, they were obliged to have an Eye over their Horses.

The Excubie, at the Gates of the Camp, and at the Intrenchments, they properly called Stationes. There seems to have been assigned one Company of Foot, and one Troop of Horse to each of the four Gates every Day. And it was a most unpardonable Crime to desert their Post, or abandon their Corps of Guards. The Excellency of Roman Discipline, in this Particular, has appeared on many Occasions to their great Honour, and to the Benefit of their Affairs. To give one Instance: At the Siege of Agriantum in Sicily, in the first Punic War, when the Roman Guards had dispersed themselves abroad a little farther than they ought into the Fields for Forage; and the Carthaginians laying hold on the Opportunity, made a vigorous Sally from the Town, and in all Probability would have forced the Camp: The Soldiers, who had carelessly neglected their Duty, being sensible of the extreme Penalty they had incurred, resolved to repair the Fault by some remarkable Behaviour; and accordingly rallying together, they not only sustained the Shock of the Enemy, to whom they were far inferior in Number, but in the End made so great a Slaughter among them, as compelled them to retreat to their Works, when they had well nigh forced the Roman Lines (a).

The Night-Guards assigned to the General and Tribunes were of the same Nature as those in the Day. But the proper Vigiles were four in every Manipulus, keeping Guard three Hours, and then relieved by Fours: So that there were four Sets in a Night, according to the four Watches, which took their Name from this Custom.

The Way of setting this nightly Guard, was by a Tally or Tessera, with a particular Inscription given from one Centurion to another, quite through the Army, till it came again to the Tribune who at first delivered it. Upon the Receipt of this the Guard was immediately set. The Person deputed to carry the Tessera from the Tribunes to the Centurions was called Tesserarius.

But, because this was not a sufficient Regulation of the Business, they had the Circuitio Vigilum, or a Visiting the Watch, performed commonly about four Times in the Night, by some of the Horse. Upon extraordinary Occasions, the Tribunes and Lieutenant-Generals, and sometimes the General himself, made these Circuits in Person, and took a strict View of the Watch in every Part of the Camp.

Livy (a), when he takes an Occasion to compare the Macedonians with the Roman Soldiers, gives the latter particularly the Preference, for their unwearied Labour and Patience in carrying on their Works. And that this was no mean Encomium, appears from the Character Polybius (b) has bestowed on the Macedonians, that scarce any People endured Hardships better, or were more patient of Labour; whether in their Fortifications or Encampments, or in any other painful and hardy Employment incident to the Life of a Soldier. There is no Way of showing the Excellency of the Romans in this Affair, but by giving some remarkable Instances of the military Works; and we may be satisfied with an Account of some of them, which occur under the Conduct of Julius Cæsar.

When he besieged a Town of the Atuatici in Gallia, he begit it with a Rampart of twelve Feet high, and as many broad; strengthening it with a vast Number of wooden Forts; the whole Compass included fifteen Miles: And all this he finished with such wonderful Expedition, that the Enemy were obliged to confess they thought the Romans were assisted in these Attempts by some supernatural or divine Power (c).

At another Time, in an Expedition against the Helvetii in the same Country, with the Assistance only of one Legion, and some Provincial Soldiers, he raised a Wall nineteen Miles long, and sixteen Feet high, with a Ditch proportionable to defend it (d).

More remarkable than either of these were his Fortifications before Alesia, or Alexia in Burgundy, described by himself at large in his seventh Book; by which he protected his Army against fourscore thousand Men that were in the Town; and two hundred and forty thousand Foot and eight thousand Horse that were arrived to the Assistance of the Enemy (e).

(a) L. 9. (b) l. 9. (c) Cæsar, de Bell. Gall. lib. 2. cap. 3. (d) Ibid.
Bell. Gall. (e) Id. lib. 7.

But his most wonderful Performance, of this Nature, were the Works with which he shut up Pompey and his Army in Dyrrachium, reaching from Sea to Sea; which are thus elegantly described by Lucan, Lib. vi.

*Franguntur montes, planumque per ardua Cæsar
Ducit opus : pandit fossas, turrítæque summis .
Disponit Castellæ jugis, magnæque recessu
Amplexus fines, saltus, nemorosæque tesquæ,
Et sylvas, vastæque feras indagine claudit :
Non desunt campi, non desunt pabula magno,
Castræque Cæsareo circumdatus aggere mutat, &c.*

Vast Cliffs, beat down, no more o'erlook the Main,
And levell'd Mountains form a wond'rous Plain :
Unbounded Trenches with high Forts secure
The stately Works, and scorn a rival Power.
Woods, Forests, Parks, in endless Circuits join'd,
With strange Inclosures cheat the savage Kind.
Still Pompey's Foragers secure may range ;
Still he his Camp, without Confinement, change, &c.

The Exercises of their Body were Walking, Running, Vaulting, Leaping, and Swimming. The first was very serviceable upon Account of tedious Marches, which were sometimes of Necessity to be undertaken ; the next to make them give a more violent Charge to the Enemy ; and the two last for climbing the Ramparts and passing the Ditches. The Vaulting belonged properly to the Cavalry, and is still owned as useful as ever.

The Exercises of their Arms Lipsius divides into Palaria and Armatura.

The Exercitia ad Palum, or Palaria, were performed in this Manner : They set up a great Post about six Feet high, suitable to the Stature of a Man ; and this the Soldiers were wont to assail with all Instruments of War, as if it were indeed a real Enemy ; learning upon this, by the Assistance of the Campidoctores, how to place their Blows aright. Juvenal brings in the very Women affecting this Exercise :

———*Vel quis non vidit vulnura Pali
Quem cavat assiduus sudibus, scutoque laceffit ?* Sat. vi. 246.
O 4 Who

Who has not seen them, when, without a Blush,
Against the Post their Wicker Shields they crush, Flourish the Sword, and at the Plastron push?

[Mr. Dryden.]

Armatura consisted chiefly in the Exercises performed with all Manner of missile Weapons; as throwing off the Spear or Javelin, shooting of Arrows, and the like; in which the Tyrones, or new list'd Men, were trained with great Care, and with the severest Discipline: Juvenal may, perhaps, allude to this Custom in his fifth Satyr: 153.

*Tu scabie frueris mali, quod in aggere rodit
Qui tegitur parma & galea, metuensque flagelli
Discit ab hirsuto jaculum toquere Capella.*

To you such scabb'd harsh Fruit is given, as raw
Young Soldiers at their Exercising gnaw,
Who trembling learn to throw the fatal Dart,
And under Rods of rough Centurions smart.

[Mr. Dryden.]

Nor did the common Soldiers only practise these Feats, but the Commanders themselves often set them an Example of Industry, and were very eminent for their Dexterity in Performances of this Nature. Thus the famous Scipio is described by Italicus:

*Ipse inter medios venturæ ingentia laudis
Signa debat, vibrare sudem, transmittere saltu
Murales fossas, undæum frangere nando
Indutus thoraca vadum, spectacula tantæ
Ante acies virtutis erant; sæpe alite planta
Illa perfoßum, & campi per aperta volentem
Ipse pedes prævertit equum; sæpe arduus idem
Castrorum spatium & saxo transmissit & hasta.*

Lib. viii.

Among the rest the noble Chief came forth,
And show'd glad Omens of his future Worth;
High o'er his Head, admir'd by all the Brave,
He brandish'd in the Air his threat'ning Stave;
Or leap'd the Ditch, or swam the spacious Moat,
Heavy with Arms, and his embroidered Coat.
Now fiery Steeds, though spur'd with Fury on,
On Foot he challeng'd, and on Foot outran.

While

While cross the Plain he shap'd his airy Course,
 Flew to the Goal, and sham'd the gen'rous Horse.
 Now pond'rous Stones, well pois'd, with both his Hands
 Above the wond'ring Crowd unmov'd he sends;
 Now cross the Camp aims his long Ashen Spear,
 Which o'er ten thousand Heads flies singing thro' the Air.

Thus have we taken a short View of the chief Duties, Works, and Exercises of the Soldiers; but we must not forget their constant Labour and Trouble of carrying their Baggage on their Shoulders in a March; this was commonly so heavy a Burthen, and so extremely tiresome, that Virgil calls it injustus fascis. Geor. iii. 346.

*Non secus ac patriis acer Romanus in armis
 Injusto sub fasce viam dum carpit, & hosti
 Ante expectatum positus stat in ordine castris.*

Thus under heavy Arms the Youth of Rome
 Their long laborious Marches overcome;
 Bending with unjust Loads they chearly go,
 And pitch their sudden Camp before the Foe.

[Mr. Dryden.]

C H A P. XIV,

Of the SOLDIERS PAY.

THE Roman Pay consisted of three Parts; Money, Corn, and Clothes.

As to the Money, it is very certain that for above three hundred Years together the Army served gratis, and at their own Charge; and when afterwards a certain Pay came to be established, it was no more than two Oboli a Day to the common Foot; to the Horse a Drachma apiece. It is probable that the Tribunes received what was counted very considerable (though Polybius is silent in this Matter) since, in several Authors, we find a large Salary expressed by a Metaphor taken from a Tribune's Stipend: Thus Juvenal particularly:

— Alter enim, quantum in Legione Tribuni Accipiunt, donat Calvinæ vel Catiænæ.

Sat. iii. 132.
 For

For t'other wealthy Rogue can throw away
Upon a single Girl a Tribune's Pay.

Yet Lipsius has conjectured, from very good Authority, that it could not be more than four times the ordinary Stipend, or a Drachma and two Oboli.

And these were all such mean Considerations, that Livy had very good Reason for his Remark: Nulla unquam Respublica fuit, in quam tam seræ avaritia luxuriæque immigraverunt, nec ubi tantus ac tam diu paupertati ac parcimoniæ honos fuit (a). Never was there any State or Kingdom in which Avarice and Luxury so late gained a Head, or where honest Poverty and Frugality continued longer in Esteem and Veneration.

Julius Cæsar was the first that made any considerable Alteration in this Affair; who, Suetonius affirms, doubled the Legionary Pay for ever.

Augustus settled a new Stipend raised to ten Asses a Day; and the following Emperors made such large Additions, that in the Time of Domitian, the ordinary Stipend was twenty-five Asses per Diem.

The Officers, whom they received the Money from, were the Quæstors; or rather the Tribuni Aerarii, who were a distinct Society from the former, and who (as Vossius (b) has settled the Point) were commissioned to take up Money of the Quæstors to pay off the Army. But it is probable, that being many in Number, as they are constantly represented in History, they had some other Business besides this given in Charge. Calvo the Civilian says, that they had the Supervisal of all the Money coined in the City, as the Quæstor took Care of the Taxes coming in from the Provinces (c).

Besides the Pay received in Money, we read of Corn and Clothes as often given to the Soldiers: But Polybius assures us, that the Quæstor always subtracted some Part of their Pay on that Account: And Plutarch, among the popular Laws of C. Gracchus, makes him the Author of one, ordaining, That the Soldiers should be clothed at the Expence of the State, without the least Diminution of their Stipend. The Wheat allowed to the Foot was every Man four Modii a Month; to the Horse two Modii, and seven of Barley.

It was common for the Soldiers, especially in the Time of the strict Discipline, to prepare the Corn themselves for their own Use; and therefore some carried Hand-mills about with them, to grind it with; others pounded it with Stones; and this, hastily baked upon the Coals, very often furnished them with a Meal, which they made upon Tables of Turf, with no other Drink than bare Water, or what they called Pofca, Water sharpened with a Mixture of Vinegar.

CH A P. XV.

Of the MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.

THE Punishments used in the Camp were such as reached either the Offenders Bodies, Credit, or Goods. The Corporal Punishments were usually Beating with the Vites, or Rods, or Bastinading with the Fustes: The last, though already reckoned up among the Civil Punishments which did not touch the Life of the Malefactors; yet in the Camp it was for the most Part Capital, and was performed after this Manner: The convicted Person being brought before the Tribuns, was by him gently struck over the Shoulders with a Staff: After this, the Criminal had Liberty to run, but, at the same Time, the rest of the Soldiers had Liberty to kill him if they could; so that being prosecuted with Swords, Darts, Stones, and all Manner of Weapons on every Hand, he was presently dispatched: This Penalty was incurred by stealing any Thing out of the Camp; by giving false Evidence; by abandoning their Post in Battle; by pretending falsely to have done some great Exploit, out of Hopes of a Reward; or by fighting without the General's Order; by losing their Weapons; or aggravating a Misdemeanour less than either of these, by repeating it three Times.

If a great Number had offended, as running from their Colours, mutinying, or other general Crimes, the common Way of proceeding to Justice, was by Decimation, or putting all the Criminals Names together in a Shield or Vessel, and drawing them out by Lot; every Tenth Man being to die without Reprieve, commonly in the Manner just now described; so that, by this Means, though all were not alike sensible of the Punishment, yet all were frighted into Obedience. In later Authors we meet sometimes with Vicesimatio and Centesimatio, which Words sufficiently explain themselves.

The

The Punishments which reached no farther than their Credit, by exposing them to publick Shame, were such as these; degrading them from a higher Station to a lower; giving them a set Quantity of Barley instead of Wheat; ungirding them, and taking away their Belt; making them stand all Supper Time, while the rest sat down, and such other little Marks of Disgrace.

Besides these, A. Gellius has recorded a very singular Punishment, by letting the Delinquent Blood. His Judgment concerning the Original of this Custom is to this Purpose: He fancies that, in elder Times, this used to be prescribed to the drowsy and sluggish Soldiers, rather as a medicinal Remedy than a Punishment; and that in after Ages it might have been applied in most other Faults, upon this Consideration, that all those who did not observe the Rules of their Discipline, were to be looked upon as stupid or mad; and for Persons in those Conditions, Blood-letting is commonly successful (a). But, because this Reason is hardly satisfactory, the great Critick Muretus has obliged us with another, believing the Design of this Custom to have been, That those mean-spirited Wretches might lose that Blood with Shame and Disgrace, which they dared not spend nobly and honourably in the Service of their Country (b).

As for the Punishments relating to their Goods and Money, the Tribunes might for several Faults impose a Fine on the Delinquents, and force them to give a Pledge, in case they could not pay. Sometimes too they stopped the Stipend; whence they were called, by way of Reproach, Ære dirui.

Of the MILITARY REWARDS.

BUT the Encouragement of Valour and Industry were much more considerable than the Proceedings against the contrary Vices. The most considerable, (not to speak of the Promotion from one Station to the other, nor of the occasional Donatives in Money, distinguished by this Name from the Largesses bestowed on the common People, and termed Congiariorum) were first the Dona Imperatoria, such as

The Hasta pura, a fine Spear of Wood without any Iron on it: Such an one as Virgil has given Sylvius in the Sixth of the Æneids: 760.

*Corona

*Corona

*Corona

Corona Muralis.

*Corona Vallaris
vel

Corona Navalis

Ille (vides?) pura juvenis qui nititur hasta.

This Present was usually bestowed on him, who in some little Skirmish had killed an Enemy, engaging him Hand to Hand. They were reckoned very honourable Gifts, and the Gods are commonly represented with such Spears, on the old Coins. Mr. Walker derives hence the Custom of our great Officers carrying white Rods or Staves, as Ensigns of their Places.

The Armilla, a Sort of Bracelets, given upon Account of some eminent Service, only to such as were born Romans.

The Torques, Golden and Silver Collars, wreathed with curious Art and Beauty. Pliny attributes the Golden Collars to the Auxiliaries, and the Silver to the Roman Soldiers; but this is supposed to be a Mistake.

The Phaleræ, commonly thought to be a Suit of rich Trappings for a Horse; but, because we find them bestowed on the Foot as well as the Cavalry, we may rather suppose them to have been golden Chains of a like Nature with the Torques, only that they seem to have hung down to the Breast; whereas the other went only round the Neck. The Hopes of these two last are particularly urged among the Advantages of a military Life, by Juvenal, Sat. xvi. 60.

Ut læti phalaris omnes, & torquibus omnes.

The Vexilla, a Sort of Banners of different Colours, worked in Silk, or other curious Materials, such as Augustus bestowed on Agrippa, after he had won the Sea-fight at Actium.

Next to these were the several Coronets, received on various Occasions, As,

Corona Civica, given to any Soldier that had saved the Life of a Roman Citizen in an Engagement. This was reckoned more honourable than any other Crown, though composed of no better Materials than Oaken Boughs. Virgil calls it Civilis Quercus, Æn. vi. 772.

Atque umbrata gerunt civili tempora Quercu.

Plutarch has guessed very happily at the Reason why the Branches of this Tree should be made use of before all others. For the Oaken Wreath, says he, being otherwise sacred to Jupiter, the great Guardian of their City, they might therefore think it the most proper Ornament for him who had preserved a Citizen. Besides, the Oak may very well claim the Preference in this Case; because in the primitive Times that Tree alone was thought almost sufficient for the preserving of Man's Life: Its Acorns were the principal Diet of the old Mortals, and the Honey, Honey, which was commonly found there, presented them with a very pleasant Liquor (a).

It was a particular Honour conferred on the Persons who had merited this Crown, that when they came to any of the publick Shows, the whole Company, as well Senate as People, should signify their Respect, by rising up when they saw them enter; and that they should take their Seat on these Occasions among the Senators; being also excused from all troublesome Duties and Services in their own Persons, and procuring the same Immunity for their Father and Grandfather by his Side (b).

Corona Muralis, given to him who first scaled the Walls of a City in a general Assault; and therefore in the Shape of it there was some Allusion made to the Figure of a Wall.

Corona Cistrensis, or Vallaris, the Reward of him who had first forced the Enemy's Intrenchments.

Corona Navalis, bestowed on such as had signalized their Valour in an Engagement at Sea; being set round with Figures like the Beaks of Ships.

————— Cui belli insigne superbum

Tempora navali fulgent rostrata corona. Virg. Æn. viii. 684.

Lipsius fancies the Corona Navalis, and the Rostrata to have been distinct Species, though they are generally believed to be the same Kind of Crown.

Corona Obsidionalis: This was not like the rest given by the General to the Soldiers, but presented by the common Consent of the Soldiers to the General, when he had delivered the Romans or their Allies from a Siege. It was composed of the Grass growing in the besieged Place.

Corona Triumphalis, made with Wreaths of Laurel, and proper only to such Generals as had the Honour of a Triumph.

In after Ages this was changed for Gold *, and
 * Aureum Coronarium. not restrained only to those that actually triumphed, but presented on several other Accounts, as commonly by the foreign States and Provinces to their Patrons and Benefactors. Several of the other Crowns too are thought to have been of Gold; as the Castrensis, the Mural, and the Naval.

Besides these we meet with the Corona Aurea, often bestowed on Soldiers without any other additional Term.

(a) Plutarch in Coriolan.

(b) Plin. lib. 16. cap. 4.

And Dion Cassius mentions a particular Sort of Coronet made of Olive Boughs, and bellowed like the rest, in Consideration of some signal Act of Valour.

Lipsius believes these to have succeeded in the Room of the Golden Crowns, after they were laid aside.

The most remarkable Person, upon Record in History, for obtaining a great Number of these Rewards, was one C. Siccinius (or Sicinius) Dentatus; who had received in the Time of his military Service eight Crowns of Gold; fourteen civic Crowns, three mural, eighty-three golden Torques, sixty golden Armilla, eighteen Hastæ puræ, and seventy-five Phalera (a).

But far greater Honours were conferred on the victorious Generals, some of which were usually decreed them in their Absence; others at their Arrival in the City.

Of the former Kind were the Salutatio Imperatoris, and the Supplication; of the latter the Ovation and the Triumph.

The first of these was no more than the Saluting the Commander in Chief with the Title of Imperator, upon Account of any remarkable Success; which Title was decreed him by the Senate at Rome, after it had been given him by the joint Acclamations of the Soldiers in the Camp.

The Supplicatio was a solemn Procession to the Temple of the Gods, to return Thanks for any Victory.

After obtaining any such remarkable Advantage, the General commonly gave the Senate an Account of the Exploit by Letters wreathed about with Laurel*, in which, after * Litteræ Laureatæ, the Account of his Success, he desired the Favour of a Supplication, or publick Thanksgiving.

This being granted, for a set Number of Days, the Senate went in a solemn Manner to the chief Temples, and assisted at the Sacrifices proper to the Occasion; holding a Feast in the Temples to the Honour of the respective Deities. Hence Servius explains that of Virgil, —Simul Divum Templis indicit Honorem; Æn. i. 636.

as alluding to a solemn Supplication.

In the mean Time the whole Body of the Commonalty kept Holy-day, and frequented the religious Assemblies; giving Thanks for the late Success, and imploring a long Continuance of the Divine Favour and Assistance.

(a) A. Gell. lib. 8. cap. 21. Pa'er. Max. &c.

Octavius Cæsar, together with the Consuls Hirtius and Pansa, upon their raising the Siege of Mutina, were honoured with a Supplication fifty Days long.

At last this Ceremony became ridiculous; as appears from the Supplications decreed Nero, for the Murder of his Mother, and for the Fruitfulness of Poppæa, of which we read in Tacitus.

The Ovation some fancy to have derived its Name from shouting Evion! to Bacchus; but the true Original is Ovis, the Sheep which was usually offered in this Procession; as an Ox in the Triumph. The Show generally began at the Albanian Mountain, whence the General, with his Retinue, made his Entry into the City: He went on Foot with many Flutes, or Pipes, sounding in Concert as he passed along, wearing a Garment of Myrtle, as a Token of Peace, with an Aspect rather raising Love and Respect than Fear. A. Gellius informs us, that this Honour was then conferred on the Victor, when either the War had not been proclaimed in due Method, or not undertaken against a lawful Enemy, and on a just Account; or when the Enemy was but mean and inconsiderable (a). But Plutarch has delivered his Judgment in a different Manner: He believes that heretofore the Difference betwixt the Ovation and the Triumph was not taken from the Greatness of the Achievements, but from the Manner of performing them: For they who having fought a set Battle, and slain a great Number of the Enemy, returned Victors, led that martial, and (as it were) cruel Procession of the Triumph. But those who without Force, by Benevolence and civil Behaviour had done the Business, and prevented the shedding human Blood; to these Commanders Custom gave the Honour of this peaceable Ovation. For a Pipe is the Ensign or Badge of Peace, and Myrtle the Tree of Venus, who, beyond any other Deities, has an extreme Aversion to Violence and War.

But whatever other Difference there lay between these two Solemnities, we are assured the Triumph was much the more noble and splendid Procession. None were capable of this Honour but Dictators, Consuls, or Prætors; though we find some Examples of different Practice; as particularly in Pompey the Great, who had a Triumph decreed him, while he was only a Roman Knight, and had not reached the Senatorian Age (c).

A regular Account of the Proceedings at one of these Solemnities, will give us a better Knowledge of the Matter, than a larger Disquisition about the several Parts and Appendages that belonged to it. And this the excellent Plutarch has favoured us with, in his Description of Paulus Æmilius's Triumph after the taking King Perseus Prisoner, and putting a final Period to the Macedonian Empire. This must be owned to be the most glorious Occasion imaginable; and therefore we may expect the most complete Relation that can possibly be desired. The Ceremony then of Æmilius's Triumph was performed after this Manner:

(a) Nell. Ant. lib. 5. cap. 6. (b) What. in Marcell. (c) Plut. in Pomp.

“ The People erected Scaffolds in the Forum and Circus, and “ all the other Parts of the City where they could best behold
 “ the Pomp. The Spectators were clad in white Garments;
 “ all the Temples were open and full of Garlands and Perfumes;
 “ the Ways cleared and cleansed by a great many Officers and “ Tipstiffs, that drove away such as thronged the Passage,
 “ or straggled up and down. This Triumph lasted three Days:
 “ On the first, which was scarce long enough for the Sight,
 “ were to be seen the Statues, Pictures, and Images of an extraordinary “ Bigness, which were taken from the Enemy, drawn upon seven “ hundred and fifty Chariots. On the second was carried, in a “ great many Wains, the fairest and the richest Armour of the “ Macedonians, both of Brasses and Steel, all newly furnished
 “ and glittering; which, although piled up with the greatest “ Art and Order, yet seemed to be tumbled on Heaps carelessly
 “ and by Chance; Helmets were thrown on Shields, Coats of “ Mail upon Greaves, Cretan Targets, and Thracian “ Bucklers and Quivers of Arrows lay huddled among the “ Horses Bits; and through these appeared the Points of naked “ Swords, intermixed with long Spears. All these Arms were “ tied together with just such a Liberty, that they knocked “ against one another as they were drawn along, and made a “ harsh and terrible Noise; so that the very Spoils of the “ Conquered could not be beheld without Dread. After these “ Waggon loads of Armour, there followed three thousand Men,
 “ who carried the Silver that was coined, in seven hundred “ and fifty Vessels, each of which weighed three Talents,
 “ and was carried by four Men. Others brought Silver “ Bowls, and Goblets, and Cups, all disposed in such Order,
 “ as to make the best Show, and all valuable, as well for their “ Bigness, as the Thickness of their engraved Work. On the “ third Day, early in the Morning, first came the Trumpeters,
 “ who did not sound as they were wont in a Procession

“cession or solemn Entry, but such a Charge as the Romans use
 “when they encourage their Soldiers to fight. Next followed “young Men girt about with Girdles curiously wrought, which “led to the Sacrifice 120 stalled Oxen, with their Horns gilded,
 “and their Heads adorned with Ribbands and Garlands; and “with these were Boys that carried Platters of Silver and Gold.
 “After this was brought the Gold Coin, which was divided “into Vessels that weighed three Talents, like to those that “contained the Silver; they were in Number fourscore want“ing three. These were followed by those that brought the “consecrated Bowl, which Æmilius caused to be made, that “weighed ten Talents, and was all beset with precious Stones:
 “Then were exposed to View the Cups of Antigonus and Seleu-“cus, and such as were made after the Fashion invented by “Thericles, and all the Gold Plate that was used at Perseus’s “Table. Next to these came Perseus’s Chariot, in the which “his Armour was placed, and on that his Diadem: And after “a little Intermision,, the King’s Children were led Captives,
 “and with them a Train of Nurses, Masters, and Governors,
 “who all wept, and stretched forth their Hands to the Specta“tors, and taught the little Infants to beg and intreat their “Compassion. There were two Sons and a Daughter, who,
 “by Reason of their tender Age, were altogether insensible of
 “the Greatness of their Misery; which Insensibility of their “Condition rendered it much more deplorable; insomuch that “Perseus himself was scarce regarded as he went along, whilst “Pity had fixed the Eyes of the Romans upon the Infants, and “many of them could not forbear Tears: All beheld the Sight
 “with a Mixture of Sorrow and Joy, until the Children were “past. After his Children and their Attendants, came Perseus “himself, clad all in Black, and wearing Slippers, after the “Fashion of his Country: He looked like one altogether asto“nished and deprived of Reason, through the Greatness of his “Misfortunes. Next followed a great Company of his Friends “and Familiars, whose Countenances were disfigured with “Grief, and who testified to all that beheld them, by their “Tears, and their continual looking upon Perseus, that it was “his hard Fortune they so much lamented, and that they were “regardless of their own. After these were carried four hun“dred Crowns all made of Gold, and sent from the Cities by “their respective Ambassadors to Æmilius, as a Reward due to “his Valour. Then he himself came seated on a Chariot mag“nificently adorned (a Man worthy to be beheld, even with“out

“ out these Ensigns of Power :) he was clad in a Garment of Purple, interwoven with Gold, and held out a Laurel-Branch in his Right-Hand. All the Army in like Manner, with Boughs of Laurel in their Hands, and divided into Bands and Companies, followed the Chariot of their Commander, some singing Odes (according to the usual Custom) mingled with Raillery; others, Songs of Triumph and the Praises of Æmilius's Deeds, who was admired and counted happy by all Men, yet unenvied by every one that was good.”

There was one remarkable Addition to this Solemnity, which, though it seldom happened, yet ought not to escape our Notice: This was when the Roman General had, in any Engagement, killed the chief Commander of the Enemy with his own Hands: For then, in the triumphal Pomp, the Arms of the slain Captain were carried before the Victor, decently hanging on the Stock of an Oak, and so composing a Trophy. In this Manner the Procession went on to the Temple of Jupiter Feretrius, (so called a feriendo) and the General making a formal Dedication of his Spoils (the Spolia opima, as they termed them) hung them up in the Temple. The first who performed this gallant Piece of Religion was Romulus, when he had slain Acron, King of the Cæninenſes; the second Cornelius Cossus, with the Arms of Tolumnius, a General of the Veientes; the third and last M. Marcellus, with those taken from Viridomarus, King of the Gauls; whence Virgil says of him, Æn. vi. 859.

Tertiaque arma patri suspendet capta Quirino.

Where Quirino must be understood only as an Epithet applied to Jupiter, as denoting his Authority and Power in War; as the same Word is attributed to Janus by Horace and Suetonius. Therefore Servius is most certainly guilty of a Mistake, when he tells us, that the first Spoils of this Nature were, according to Numa's Laws, to be presented to Jupiter; the second to Mars; and the third to Quirinus, or Romulus; for that Decree of Numa only took Place, if the same Person had the good Fortune to take these Spoils three Times; but we are assured, that not only Romulus but Cossus and Marcellus too all made the Dedication to Jupiter.

The Admirers of the Roman Magnificence will be infinitely pleased with the Relation already given from Plutarch of the Triumphal Pomp: While others, who fancy that People to have been possessed with a strange Measure of vain Glory, and attribute all their Military State and Grandeur to ambitious Ostentation, will be much better satisfied with the satyrical Account which Juvenal furnishes us with in his tenth Satire. He is saying, that Democritus found Subject enough for a continual Fit of Laughter, in Places where there was no such formal Pageantry, as is commonly to be seen in Rome: And then he goes on, 36.

*Quid, si vidisset Prætorcm curribus altis
Extantem, & medio sublimem in pulvere Circi
In tunica Jovis, & pictæ Sarrana ferentem
Ex humeris auleæ togæ, magnæque coronæ
Tantum orbem, quanto cervix non sufficit ulla?
Quippa tenet sudans hanc publicus, & sibi Consul
Se placeat, curru servus portatur eodem.
Da nunc & volucrum, Sceptro quæ surgit eburno,
Illinc cornicines, hinc præcedentia longi
Agnitis officia, & nivosos ad fræna Quirites, Defessa in oculis, quos sportula fecit amicos.*

What had he done, had he beheld on high
Our Consul seated in mock-Majesty:
His Chariot rolling o'er the dusty Place,
While with dumb Pride, and a set formal Face,
He moves in the dull ceremonial Track,
With Jove's embroidered Coat upon his Back:
A Suit of Hangings had not more oppress
His Shoulders, than a long laborious Vest.
A heavy Gewgaw (call'd a Crown) that spread
About his Temples, drown'd his narrow Head;
And would have crush'd it with the massy Freight,
But that a sweating Slave sustain'd the Weight,
A Slave in the same Chariot seen to ride,
To mortify the mighty Madman's Pride.
And now th' Imperial Eagle rais'd on high,
With golden Beak (the Mark of Majesty)
Trumpets before, and on the Left and Right
A Cavalcade of Nobles all in white:
In their own Natures false and flattering Tribes;
But made his Friends by Places and by Bribes.

CHAP.

C H A P. XVII.

The ROMAN Way of declaring War, and of making Leagues.

THE Romans used Abundance of Superstition in entering upon any Hostility, or closing in any League or Confederacy: The Publick Ministers, who performed the ceremonial Part of both these, were the Feciales, or Heralds, already described among the Priests; nothing remains but the Ceremonies themselves, which were of this Nature. When any neighbouring State had given sufficient Reason for the Senate to suspect a Design of breaking with them; or had offered any Violence or Injustice to the Subjects of Rome, which was enough to give them the Repute of Enemies; one of the Feciales, chosen out of the College upon this Occasion, and habited in the Vest belonging to his Order, together with his other Ensigns and Habilliments, set forward for the Enemy's Country. As soon as he reached the Confines, he pronounced a formal Declaration of the Cause of his Arrival, calling all the Gods to witness, and imprecating the divine Vengeance on himself and his Country, if his Reasons were not just. When he came to the chief City of the Enemy, he again repeated the same Declaration, with some Addition, and withal desired Satisfaction. If they delivered into his Power the Authors of the Injury, or gave Hostages for Security, he returned satisfied to Rome; if otherwise they desired Time to consider, he went away for ten Days, and then came again to hear their Resolution. And this he did, in some Cases, three Times: But, if nothing was done towards an Accomodation in about thirty Days, he declared that the Romans would endeavour to assert their Right by their Arms. After this the Herald was obliged to return, and to make a true Report of his Embassy before the Senate, assuring them of the Legality of the War which they were now consulting to undertake; and was then again dispatched to perform the last Part of the Ceremony, which was to throw a Spear into, or towards the Enemy's Country, in Token of Defiance, and, as a Summons to War, pronouncing at the same Time a set Form of Words to the like Purpose.

As to the making of Leagees, Polybius acquaints us, that the Ratification of the Articles of an Agreement, between the Romans and the Carthaginians, was performed in this Manner: The Carthaginians swore by the God of their Country; and the Romans, after their ancient Custom, swore by a Stone, and then by Mars. They swore by a Stone thus: The Herald who took the Oath, having sworn in Behalf of the Publick, takes up a Stone, and then pronounces these Words:

If I keep my Faith, may the Gods vouchsafe their Assistance, and give me Success; if, on the contrary, I violate it, then may the other Party be entirely safe and preserved in their Country, in their Laws, in their Possessions, and, in a Word, in all their Rights and Liberties; and may I perish and fall alone, as now this Stone does: And then he lets the Stone fall out of his Hands (a).

Livy's Account of the like Ceremony is something more particular; yet differs little in Substance, only that he says the Herald's concluding Clause was, Otherwise may Jove strike the Roman People, as I do this Hog; and accordingly he killed a Hog that stood ready by, with the Stone which he held in his Hand. This last Opinion is confirmed by the Authority of Virgil, when, speaking of the Romans and Albanians, he says, viii. 641:

——— Et cæsa jungebant fœdera Porca.

And perhaps both these Customs might be in Use in different Times.

C H A P. XVIII.

The Roman Method of treating the People they conquered; with the Constitution of the Coloniae, Municipia, Præfecturæ, and Provinces.

THE civil Usage and extraordinary Favours, with which the Romans obliged the poor conquered Nations, has been reasonably esteemed one of the prime Causes of the Extent of their Dominions, and the Establishment of their Command: Yet when they saw Occasion, they were not to seek in severer Methods, such as the seizing on the greatest Part of the Enemy's Land, or removing the Natives to another Soil. If a State or People had been necessitated to surrender themselves into the Roman Power, they used sub jugum mitti, to be made pass under a Yoke, in Token of Subjection: For this Purpose they set up two Spears, and laying a third cross them at the Top, ordered those who had surrendered their Persons to go under them without Arms or Belts. Those who could not be brought to deliver themselves up, but were taken by Force, as they suffered several Penalties, so very often sub corona venibant, they were publickly sold for Slaves. Where by Corona some understand a Sort of Chaplets which they put about the Captives Heads for Distinctions; others would have it mean the Ring of the Roman Soldiers, who stood round the Captives while they were exposed to Sale. A. Gellius prefers the former Reason (a).

The several Forms of Government which the Romans established in their Conquests, are very well worth our Knowledge, and are seldom rightly distinguished; we may take Notice of these four: Colonies, Municipia, Præfecturæ, and Provinces.

Colonias (properly speaking) were States, or Communities, where the chief Part of the Inhabitants had been transplanted from Rome: and though mingled with the Natives who had been left in the conquered Place, yet obtained the whole Power and Authority in the Administration of Affairs. One great Advantage of this Institution was, that by this Means the Veteran

(a) Lib. 7. cap. 4.

Soldiers, who had served out their legal Time, and had spent their Vigour in the Honour and Defence of their Country, might be favoured with a very agreeable Reward, by forming them into a Colony, and sending them where they might be Masters of large Possessions, and so lead the Remainder of their Days in Ease and Plenty.

Municipia were commonly Corporations, or enfranchised Places, where the Natives were allowed the Use of their old Laws and Constitutions, and at the same Time honoured with the Privilege of Roman Citizens. But then this Privilege, in some of the Municipia, reached no farther than the bare Title, without the proper Rights of Citizens, such as voting in the Assemblies, bearing Offices in the City, and the like. The former Honour gave them the Name of Cives Romani, the other only of Romani; as P. Mucius with his usual Exactness has distinguished (a). Of this latter Sort, the first Example were the Cerites, a People of Tuscan, who preserving the sacred Relicks of the Romans, when the Gauls had taken the City, were afterwards dignified with the Name of Roman Citizens; but not admitted into any Part of the Publick Administration. Hence the Censor's Tables, where they entered the Names of such Persons as for some Misdemeanor were to lose their Right of Suffrage, had the Name of Cerites Tabula (b).

The Præfecturæ were certain Towns in Italy, whose Inhabitants had the Name of the Roman Citizens; but were neither allowed to enjoy their own Laws, nor Magistrates, being governed by annual Præfects sent from Rome. There were generally such Places as were either suspected, or had some Way or other incurred the Displeasure of the Roman State; this being accounted the hardest Condition that was imposed on any People of Italy (c).

The Differences between the proper Citizens of Rome, and the Inhabitants of Municipia, Colonies, and Præfecturæ, may be thus in short summed up. The first and best Order were registered in the Census, had the Right of Suffrage, and of bearing Honours, were assiduous in the Poll-Tax, served in the Legions, used the Roman Laws and Religion, and were called Quirites and Papulus Romanus. The Municipes were allowed the four first of these Marks, and were denied the four last. The Coloni were in these three Respects like the true Citizens, that they used the Roman Laws and Religion, and served in the Legions; but they were debarred the other five Conditions. The People in the Præfecturæ had the hardest Measure of all; being obliged to submit to the Roman Laws, and yet enjoying no farther Privilege of Citizens (a).

(a) De Civitat. Rom. p. 29. (b) Id. Gall. lib. 16. cap. 12. (c) Id. Id. lib. 16. cap. 12.

All other Cities and States in Italy, which were neither Coloniæ, Municipia, nor Præfecturæ, had the Name of Fœderatæ Civitates, enjoying entirely their own Customs and Forms of Government, without the least Alteration, and only joined in Confederacy with the Romans, upon such Terms as had been adjusted between them (b).

The Provinciæ were foreign Countries of larger Extent, which, upon the entire reducing them under the Roman Dominions, were new-modelled according to the Pleasure of the Conquerors, and subjected to the Command of annual Governors sent from Rome, being commonly assigned such Taxes and Contributions as the Senate thought fit to demand. But because the several Towns and Communities in every Country did not behave themselves in the same Manner toward the Romans, some professing more Friendship, and a Desire of Union and Agreement; while others were more obdurate and refractory, and unwilling to part with their own Liberty upon any Terms; therefore to reward those People who deserved well at their Hands, they allowed some Places the Ute of their own Constitutions in many Respects, and sometimes excused the Inhabitants from paying Tribute; whence they were termed Immunes, in Opposition to the Veſtigales.

The Tribute exacted from the Provinciæ was of two Sorts, either certain or uncertain. The certain Tribute, or Stipendium, was either a set Sum of Money to be collected by the Provincial Quæstor, which they called Pecunia ordinaria; or else a Subsidy raised on the Provincials for particular Occasions, such as the maintaining of so many Soldiers, the Rigging out of so many Vessels, and the like, termed Pecunia extraordinaria.

The uncertain Tribute consisted of what they called Portorium, Scriptura, and Decuma. The Portorium was a Duty imposed upon all Goods and Wares imported and exported.

The Scriptura was a Tax laid upon Pastures and Cattle.

The Decuma was the Quantity of Corn which the Farmers were obliged to pay to the Roman State, commonly the tenth Part of their Crop. But besides this, which they properly termed Frumentum Decumanum, and which was farmed by the Publicans, hence called Decumani, there was the Frumentum emptum, and Frumentum aestimatum, both taken up in the Provinces. The Frumentum emptum was of two Sorts, either decumanum, or imperatum; the former was another Tenth paid upon the Consideration of such a Sum as the Senate had determined to be the Price of it, who rated it so much a Bushel at their Pleasure. The Frumentum Imperatum was a Quantity of Corn equally exacted of the Provincial Farmers after the two Tenths, at such a Price as the two Magistrates pleased to give. Frumentum aestimatum was a Corn-Tax required of the chief Magistrate of the Province for his private Use, and the Occasions of his Family. This was commonly compounded for in Money, and, on that Account took its Name ab aestimando, from rating it at such a Sum of Money.

Besides all these, Sigonius mentions Frumentum honorarium, upon the Authority of Cicero, in his Oration against Piso: But perhaps Cicero, in that Place, does not restrain the Honorarium to Corn, but may mean, in general, the Present usually made to Provincial Governors, soon after their Entrance on their Office.

After Augustus had made a Division of the Provinces between himself and the People, the annual Taxes, paid by the Provinces under the Emperor, were called Stipendia; and those that were gathered in the People's Provinces, Tributa (a)

The Roman Way of taking Towns; with the most remarkable Inventions and Engines made Use of in their Sieges.

Before we enquire into this Subject, a very memorable Custom presents itself to our Notice, which was practised almost as soon as the Roman Army invested any Town; and that was the evocatio Deorum tutelarium, or inviting out the Guardian Deities: The Reason of which seems to have been, either because they thought it impossible to force any Place, while it enjoyed such powerful Defenders; or else, because they accounted it a most heinous Act of Impiety to act in Hostility against the Persons of the Gods. This Custom is described at large by Macrobius in his Saturnalia, lib. 3. cap. 9.

The Romans were seldom desirous of attempting any Town by Way of Siege, because they thought it would scarce answer the Expence and Incommodity of the Method; so that this was generally their last Hopes; and in all their great Wars, there are very few Examples of any long Leaguers undertook by them. The Means by which they possessed themselves of any important Places were commonly either by Storm or immediate Surrendery. If they took a Town by Storm, it was either by open Force or by Stratagem. In the former, they made their Attacks without battering the Walls, and were only said, aggredi urbem cum corona, to besiege a Town; because they drew their whole Army round the Walls, and fell on all the Quarters at once. If this Way was ineffectual, they battered down the Walls with their Rams and other Engines. Sometimes they mined and entered the Town under-ground: Sometimes, that they might engage with the Enemy upon equal Terms, they built wooden Towers, or raised Mounts to the Height of the Walls, from whence they might gall and molest them within their Works. The Besieged were in most Danger in the first Case, upon a general Assault; for their Walls were to be made good in all Places at once; and it fell out many Times, that there were not Men enough to supply and relieve all the Parts; and if they had a sufficient Number of Men, yet all perhaps were not of equal Courage; and if any gave Ground, the whole whole Town was in a great Hazard of being lost : So that the Romans oftentimes carried very considerable Places at one Storm. But if they battered the Walls with Engines, they were under some Disadvantage, their Quarters being of Necessity to be extended, so that they must be thinner and weaker in some Places than in others, and unable to make a stout Opposition against any considerable Sally. Besides, the Besieged were not at a Loss for Ways of defeating their Stratagems ; as they eluded the Force of their Mines by countermining, or by disturbing them in their Works ; particularly putting Oil and Feathers, with other stinking Stuff, into Barrels of Wood ; then setting them on Fire, they tumbled them among the Romans, that the Noisomeness of the Stench might force them to quit their Stations. Their Towers of Wood, their Rams and other Engines, they commonly set on Fire and destroyed ; and then for the Mounts which were raised against the Walls, they used, by digging underneath, to steal away the Earth, and loosen the Foundations of the Mount till it fell to the Ground.

Upon this Account the Romans (as was before observed) much preferred the sudden and brisk Way of attacking a Place ; and if they did not carry it in a little Time, they frequently raised the Siege, and prosecuted the War by other Means. As Scipio, in his African Expedition, having assaulted Utica without Success, changed his Resolution, drew off his Men from the Place, and addressed himself wholly to bring the Carthaginian Army to an Engagement. And therefore, though sometimes they continued a tedious Siege, as at Fai, Carthage, and Jerusalem, yet generally they were much more desirous of drawing the Enemy to a Battle ; for, by defeating an Army, they many Times got a whole Kingdom in a Day ; whereas an obstinate Town has cost them several Years.

See Machiavel's Art of WAR, Book II.

The Inventions and Engines, which the Romans made Use of in their Sieges, were very numerous, and the Knowledge of them is but of little Service at present ; however we may take a short View of the most considerable of them, which most frequently occur in Cæsar and other Historians : These are the Turres mobiles, the Trebudines, the Masculæ, the Vinea, and the Piuci, together with the Aræ, the Buigla, the Catapultæ, and the Scorpio.

The

The Turres mobiles, or moveable Turrets; were of two Sorts, the lesser and the greater: The lesser Sort were about sixty Cubits high, and the square Sides seventeen Cubits broad; they had five or six, and sometimes ten Stories or Divisions, every Division being made open on all Sides. The greater Turret was 120 Cubits high, 23 Cubits square; containing sometimes fifteen, sometimes twenty Divisions. They were of very great Use in making Approaches to the Walls, the Divisions being able to carry Soldiers with Engines, Ladders, Casting-Bridges, and other Necessaries. The Wheels, on which they went, were contrived to be within the Planks, to defend them from the Enemy, and the Men who were to drive them forward stood behind, when they were most secure; the Soldiers in the Inside were protected by raw Hides which were thrown over the Turret, in such Places as were most exposed.

The Testudo was properly a Figure which the Soldiers cast themselves into; so that their Targets should close all together above their Heads, and defend them from the missile Weapons of the Enemy; as if we suppose the first Rank to have stood upright on their Feet, and the Rest to have stooped lower and lower by Degrees, 'till the last Rank kneeled down upon their Knees; so that every Rank covering with their Target the Heads of all in the Rank before them, they represented a Tortoise-shell or a Sort of Pent-house. This was used as well in Field-Battles as in Sieges. But besides this, the Romans called in general all their covered defensive Engines, Testudines: Among which, those which most properly obtained the Name seem to have been, almost of an oval Figure, composed of Boards, and wattled up at the Sides with Wickers; serving for the Conveyance of the Soldiers near the Walls, on several Occasions; they ran upon Wheels, and so were distinguished from the Vincæ, with which they are sometimes confounded.

The Musculus is conceived to have been much of the same Nature as the Testudines; but it seems to have been of a smaller Size, and composed of stronger Materials, being exposed a much longer Time to the Force of the Enemy; for in these Musculi the Pioneers were sent to the very Walls, where they were to continue, while with their Dolabra, or Pick-Axes, and other Instruments, they endeavoured to undermine the Foundations. Cæsar has described the Musculus at large in his second Book of the Civil Wars.

The Vincæ were composed of Wicker-Hurdles laid for a Roof on the Top of Poles, which the Soldiers, who went under it it for Shelter, bore up with their Hands. Some will have them to have been contrived with a double Roof; the first and lower Roof of Planks, and the upper Roof of Hurdles, to break the Force of any Blow without disordering the Machine.

The Plutei consisted of the same Materials as the former, but were of a much different Figure; being shaped like an arched Sort of Waggon; and having three Wheels, so conveniently placed, that the Machine would move either Way with equal Ease; they were put much to the same Use as the Musculi.

The Engines hitherto described were primarily intended for the Defence of the Soldiers; the Offensive are yet behind. Of these the most celebrated, and which only deserves a particular Description, was the Aries or Ram: This was of two Sorts, the one rude and plain, the other artificial and compound. The former seems to have been no more than a great Beam which the Soldiers bore on their Arms and Shoulders, and with one End of it by main Force assailed the Wall. The compound Ram is thus described by Josephus: "The Ram (says he) is a vast " long Beam, like the Mast of a Ship, strengthened at one End
" with a Head of Iron, something resembling that of a Ram,
" whence it took its Name. This is hung by the Midst with " Ropes to another Beam, which lies cross a couple of Posts,
" and hanging thus equally balanced, it is by a great Number " of Men violently thrust forward, and drawn backward, and " so shakes the Wall with its Iron Head, nor is there any " Tower or Wall so thick or strong, that, after the first
" Assault of the Ram, can afterwards resist its Force in the " repeated Assaults (a)."

Plutarch informs us, that Mark Antony, in the Parthian War, made Use of a Ram of fourscore Feet long: And Vitruvius tells us, that they were sometimes 106, sometimes 120 Feet in Length; and to this perhaps the Force and Strength of the Engine was in a great Measure owing. The Ram was managed at one Time by a whole Century or Order of Soldiers; and they, being spent, were seconded by another Century; so that it played continually without any Intermision, being usually covered with a Vinea, to protect it from the Attempts of the Enemy.

(a) Flav. Joseph. d. Excidio Hierosolym. lib. 3.

As for the other Engines, which served not for such great Uses, and are not so celebrated in Authors, a mechanical Description of them would be vexatious as well as needless: Only it may in short be observed, that the Balista was always employed in throwing great Stones, the Catapulta in casting the larger Sort of Darts and Spears, and the Scorpio in sending the lesser Darts and Arrows.

C H A P. XX.

The Naval Affairs of the ROMANS.

THE Romans, though their City was seated very conveniently for Maritime Affairs, not being above fifteen Miles distant from the Tyrrhenian Sea; and having the River Tyber running through it, capable of receiving the smaller Vessels; yet seem to have wholly neglected all naval Concerns for many Years after the Building of Rome. And some are willing to assign this as one of the main Causes which preserved that State so long in its primitive Innocence and Integrity; free from all those Corruptions which an Intercourse with Foreigners might probably have brought into Fashion. However Dionysius assures us, that Ancus Martius built Ostia at the Mouth of the Tyber for a Port, that the City might, by this Means, be supplied with the Commodities of the neighbouring Nations (a). And it appears from the Reasons of the Tarentine War agreed upon by all Historians, that the Romans in that Age had a Fleet at Sea. Yet Polybius expressly maintains, that the first Time they ever adventured to Sea was in the first Punick War (b); but he must either mean this only of Ships of War, or else contradict himself: For in another Part of his Works, giving up a Transcript of some Articles agreed on between the Romans and the Carthaginians in the Consulship of M. Brutus and Horatius, soon after the Expulsion of the Royal Family; one of the Articles is to this Effect, That the Romans, and the Allies of the Romans, shall not navigate beyond the Fair Promontory, unless constrained by Weather, or an Enemy, &c. And after this in two other Treatises, which he has presented us with, there are several Clauses to the same

Purpose (a). But howsoever these Matters are to be adjusted, we are assured, that about the Year of the City 492 (b), the Romans observing that the Coast of Italy lay exposed to the Depredations of the Carthaginian Fleet, which often made Descents upon them, and considering withal that the War was likely to last, they determined to render themselves Masters of a naval Army. So wonderful was the Bravery and Resolution of that People in Enterprizes of the greatest Hazard and Moment, that having hitherto scarce dreamed of Navigation, they should, at one Heat, resolve on so adventurous an Expedition, and make the first Proof of their Skill in a Naval Battle with the Carthaginians, who had held the Dominion of the Sea uncontested, derived down to them from their Ancestors. Nay, so utterly ignorant were the Romans in the Art of Ship-Building, and it would have been almost impossible for them to have put their Design in Effect, had not Fortune, who always espoused their Cause, by a mere Accident instructed them in the Method. For a Carthaginian Galley, which was out a cruising, venturing too near the Shore, chanced to be stranded, and before they could get her off, the Romans, intercepting them, took her; and by the Model of this Galley, they built their first Fleet. But their Way of instructing their Seamen in the Use of the Oar is no less remarkable, wherein they proceeded after this Manner: they caused Banks to be contrived on the Shore, in the same Fashion and Order as they were to be in their Gallies, and placing their Men with their Oars upon the Banks, there they exercised them: An Officer, for that Purpose being seated in the Middle, who, by Signs with his Hand, instructed them how at once and all together they were to dip their Oars, and how in like Manner to recover them out of the Water: And by this Means they became acquainted with the Management of the Oar. But in a little Time, finding their Vessels were not built with extraordinary Art, and consequently proved somewhat unweildy in working, it came into their Heads to remedy this Defect, by contriving some new Invention, which might be of Use to them in Fight. And then it was that they devised the famous Machine called the Corvus; which was framed after the following Manner: They erected on the Prow of their Vessels a round Piece of Timber, of about a Foot and a half Diameter, and about twelve Feet long; on the Top whereof they had a Block or Pulley. Round this Piece of Timber, they laid a Stage or Platform of Boards, four Feet broad, and about eighteen Feet long, which was well framed, and fastened with Iron. The Entrance was long-ways, and it moved about the aforesaid upright Piece of Timber, as on a Spindle, and could be hoisted up within six Feet of the Top: About this a Sort of Parapet, Knee high, which was defended with upright Bars of Iron, sharpened at the End; towards the Top whereof there was a Ring: Through this Ring, fastening a Rope, by the Help of the Pulley, they hoisted or lowered the Engine at Pleasure; and so with it attacked the Enemy's Vessels, sometimes at their Bow, and sometimes at their Broad-side, as Occasion best served. When they had grappled the Enemy with those Iron Spikes, if they happened to swing Broad-side to Broad-side, then they entered from all Parts; but in case they attacked them on the Bow, they entered two and two, by the Help of this Machine, the foremost defending the Fore-Part, and those that followed the Flanks, keeping the Bolls of their Bucklers level with the Top of the Parapet.

To this Purpose Polybius (according to the late most excellent Version) gives us an Account of the first warlike Preparations which the Romans made by Sea. We may add, in short, the Order which they observed in drawing up their Fleet for Battle, taken from the same Author: The two Consuls were in the two Admiral Gallies, in the Front of their two distinct Squadrons, each of them just a-head of their Divisions, and a-breast of each other; the first Fleet being posted on the Right, the second on the Left, making two long Files or Lines of Battle. And whereas it was necessary to give a due Space between each Galley, to ply their Oars, and keep clear one of another, and to have their Heads or Prows looking somewhat outwards; this Manner of drawing up did therefore naturally form an Angle, the Point whereof was at the two Admiral Gallies, which were near together; and as their two Lines were prolonged, so the Distance grew consequently wider and wider towards the Rear. But, because the Naval, as well as the Land Army, consisted of four Legions, and accordingly the Ships made four Divisions, two of these are yet behind: Of which the third Fleet, or third Legion, was drawn up Front-ways in the Rear of the first and second, and so stretching along from Point to Point, composed a Triangle, whereof the third Line was the Base. Their Vessels of Burthen, that carried their Horses and Baggage, were in the Rear of these; and were, by the Help of small Boats, provided for that Purpose, towed or drawn after them. In the Rear of all was the fourth Fleet, called the Triarians, drawn up likewise in Rank or Front-ways, parallel to the third: But these made a longer Line, by which Means the Extremitiies stretched out, and extended beyond the two Angles at the Base. The several Divisions of the Army, being thus disposed, formed, as is said, a Triangle; the Area within was void, but the Base was thick and solid, and the whole Body quick, active. and very difficult to be broken.

If we descend to a particular Description of the several Sorts of Ships, we commonly meet with three Kinds, Ships of War, Ships of Burthen, and Ships of Passage: The first for the most Part rowed with Oars; the second steered with Sails; and the last often towed with Ropes. Ships of Passage were either for the Transportation of Men, such as ἐπιπλοῦντες or ρπαλιώτες; or of Horses, as the Hippagines. The Ships of Burthen, which the Roman Authors call Naves onerariæ, and the Græcian φορτωῖ, and ὀκλαῖ, (whence the Name of Hulks may properly be derived) served for the Conveyance of Victuals and other Provisions, and sometimes too for the carrying over Soldiers, as we find in Cæsar. Of the Ships of War, the most considerable were the Naves longæ, or Gallies, so named from their Form, which was the most convenient to wield round, or to cut their Way; whereas the Ships of Burthen were generally built rounder and more hollow, that they might be the more easy to load, and might hold the more Goods. The most remarkable of the Naves longæ were the Triremis, the Quadriremis, and the Quinqueremis. Τριῆς, Τετράς, and Πεντὰς; exceeding one another by one Bank of Oars; which Banks were raised slopingly one above another; and consequently those which had most Banks were built highest, and rowed with the greatest Strength. Some indeed fancy a different Original of these Names, as that in the Triremis, for Example, either there were three Banks one after the other on a Level, or three Rowers sat upon one Bank; or else three Men tugged all together at one Oar: But this is contrary, not only to the Authority of the Classics, but to the Figures of the Triremes still appearing in ancient Monuments. Besides these, there were two other Rates, one higher and the other lower. The higher Rates we meet with are the Hexeres, the Hepteres, the Octeres, and so on to the σεννὰνδρητες; nay, Polybius relates, that Philip of Macedon,
Father

Father to Perseus, had an ἑκαυδεκάηρης (a); which Livy translates, navis quam sexdecim versus remorum agebant (b), a Ship with sixteen Banks: Yet this was much inferior to the Ship built by Philopater, which Plutarch tells us had forty Banks (c). The lower Rates were, the Biremis and the Moneres. The Biremis, in Greek διήρης, or διήρης, consisted of two Banks of Oars: Of these, the fittest for Service, by Reason of their Lightness and Swiftmess, were called Liburnicæ, from the Liburni, a People in Dalmatia, who first invented that Sort of Building; for, being Corfsairs, they rowed up and down in these light Vessels, and maintained themselves by the Prizes they took (d). Yet in latter Times, all the smaller and more expedite Ships, whether they had more or less than two Banks, were termed in general Liburnæ or Liburnicæ. Thus Horace and Propertius call the Ships which Augustus made Use of in the Sea-Engagement at Actium: And Florus informs us, that his Fleet was made up of Vessels from three to six Banks (e). Suetonius mentions an extravagant Sort of Liburnicæ invented by the Emperor Caligula, adorned with Jewels in the Poop, with Sails of many Colours, and finished with large Porticos, Bagnios, and Dining-Rooms, besides the curious Rows of Vines and Fruit Trees of all Sorts (f).

The Moneres, mentioned by Livy, was a Galley, having but one single Bank of Oars, of which we find five Sorts in Authors, the εὐκόροπος, or Ætuarii, the τριακόροπος, the τεσσαράκοντορος, the πεντακόροπος, and the ἑκατόντορος of twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, and a hundred Oars.

It may be observed, that though these Under Rates are supposed to have been built in the Form of the Naves longæ, yet they are not so generally honoured with that Name; and sometimes in Authors of Credit we find them directly opposed to the Naves longæ, and at other Times to the μάχημοι, or War-Ships.

But the Ships of War occur under several other different Denominations, as the Τεταῖα, or Constratæ, or the Ἀπτεῖα. The Τεταῖα, or κατάφρακτοι, were so called, because they had καταφράγματα, or Hatches; whereas the Ἀπτεῖα, or ἀφρακτοὶ, had none. The greater Ships, as the Quadrirēmis and upwards, seem always to have had Hatches; the Triremes and Biremes are sometimes described otherwise; and all below these were Apertæ. Cicero and other Authors sometimes use the Word Aphractum for a particular Sort of Ship; and Polybius κατάφρακτος for a Quinqueremis. Besides these we meet with the Naves rostratæ and Naves turritæ: The first were such as had Beaks or Rostra, necessary to all Ships which were to engage in a Battle. The others were such as had Turrets erected on their Decks, from whence the Soldiers used all Manner of Weapons and Engines, as if it had been on Land, and so engaged with the greatest Fury imaginable; as Virgil describes the Fight at Actium:

—Pelago credas innare revulsas
Cycladas, aut montes concurrere montibus altos;
Tanta mole viri turritis puppibus instant. Æn. viii. 691.

The Officers in the Navy were, Præfectus Classis, or Admiral, and sometimes the Duumviri, when two were joined in Commission together with the Trierarchus, or Captain of a particular Ship, most properly of the Triremis; the Gubernator, or Master; the Celerylus, or Boatswain, and others of inferior Note.

Under the Emperors, as there were Legions established in most Part of the Roman Dominions, so they had constantly Fleets in those Seas, which lay conveniently for the Defence of neighbouring Countries. As Augustus kept one Navy at Misenum, in the Mare Inferius, to protect and keep in Obedience France, Spain, Mountainia, Ægypt, Sardinia, and Sicily: Another at Ravenna, in the Mare Superum, to defend and bridle Spain, Belacodon, Athalia, Crete, Cyprus, together with all Asia. Nor were their Navies only maintained on the Seas, but several too on the principal Rivers, as the Germanica Classis on the Rhine, the Danubiana, the Ægyptiaca, &c. to be met with in Tacitus and other Historians.

To this Subject of the Roman Shipping, we may add a very remarkable Custom of such as had creaped a Wreck at Sea, which

which we find hinted at almost in every Place of the Poets, and often alluded to by other Authors; on which a great modern Critick delivers himself to this Purpose.

It was a Custom for those who had been saved from a Shipwreck, to have all the Circumstances of their Adventure represented on a Tablet. Some Persons made Use of their Tablet to move the Compassion of those that they met, as they travelled up and down; and by their Charity to repair their Fortunes, which had suffered so much at Sea. These Juvenal describes, Sat. xiv. 301.

— Mersa rate Naufragus affem
Dum rogat, & picta se tempestate tuetur.

His Vessels sunk, the Wretch at some Lane's End
A painted Storm for Farthings does extend,
And lives upon the Picture of his Loss.

For this Purpose they hung the Tablet about their Necks, and kept singing a Sort of canting Verses, expressing the Manner of their Misfortunes; almost like the modern Pilgrims, Perfius, Sat. i. 88.

— Cantet si Naufragus, affem
Protulerim? Cantas cum fracta te in trabe pictum
Ex humero portes?

Say, should a shipwreck'd Sailor sing his Woe
Would I be mov'd to Pity; or bestow
An Alms? Is this your Season for a Song,
When your despairing Phiz you bear along,
Daub'd on a Plank, and o'er your Shoulders hung? }

Others hung up such a Tablet in the Temple of the particular Deity, to whom they had address'd themselves in their Exigence, and whose Assistance had, as they thought, effected their Safety. This they termed properly votiva Tabella. Juvenal has a Fling at the Roman Superstition in this Point, when he informs us, that it was the Business of a Company of Painters, to draw Pictures on these Accounts for the Temple of Isis:

— *Quam votiva testantur sana tabella
Plurima, pictores quis nescit ab Iside pasci?* xii. 27:

Such as in Iffs' Dome may be survey'd
On votive Tablets to the Life pourtray'd,
Where Painters are employ'd and earn their Bread. }

But the Custom went much farther; for the Lawyers at the Bar used to have the Case of the Client expressed in a Picture, that by showing his hard Fortune, and the Cruelty and Injustice of the adverse Party, they might move the Compassion of the Judge. This Quintilian declares himself against in his sixth Book. Nor was this all; for such Persons as had escaped in any Fit of Sickness, used to dedicate a Picture of the Deity whom they fancied to have relieved them. And this gives us a Light into the Meaning of Tibullus, Lib. i. Eleg. 3,

*Nunc Dea, nunc succurrere mihi; nam posse mederi
Pieta decet Templis multa tabella tuis.*

Now Goddes, now thy tortur'd Suppliant heal,
For Votive Paints attest thy sacred Skill.

Thus some Christians, in ancient Times (a), upon a signal Recovery of their Tealth, used to offer a Sort of Medal in Gold or Silver, on which their own Effigies were expressed, in Honour of the Saint whom they thought themselves obliged to for their Deliverance. And this Custom still obtains in the Popish Countries (b).

PART II. BOOK V.

Miscellany Customs of the ROMANS.

CHAP. I.

Of the private SPORTS and GAMES.

Great Part of the Roman Pomp and Superstition was taken up in their Games and Shows, and therefore very many of their Customs have a Dependence on those Solemnities. But, in our Way, we should not pass by the private Sports and Diversions; not that they are worth our Notice in themselves, but because many Passages and Allusions in Authors would otherwise be very difficult to comprehend.

The private Games, particularly worth our Remark, are the Latrunculi, the Tali and Tesseræ, the Pila, the Par impar, and the Trochus.

The Game at Latrunculi seems to have been much of the same Nature as the modern Chess; the Original of it is generally referred to Palamides's Invention at the Siege of Troy: Though Soncca attributes it to Chilon, one of the seven Græcian Sages; and some fancy that Pyrrhus King of Epirus contrived this Sport to instruct his Soldiers, after a diverting Manner, in the Military Art. However, it is certain, it expresses the Chance and Order of War so very happily, that no Place can lay so just a Claim to the Invention as the Camp. Thus the ingenious Vida begins his Poem on this Subject:

*Ludimus effigiem belli, simulataque veris
Prælia, buxo acies fictas, & ludicra regna:
Ut gemini inter se reges, albusque, nigerque,
Pro laude oppositi, cunctant bicoloribus armis.*

War's harmless Shape we sing, and Boxen Trains
Of Youth, encount'ring on the Cedar Plains:
How two tall Kings, by different Armour known,
Traverse the Field, and combat for Renown.

The Chess Men, which the Romans used, were generally of Wax or Glass; their common Name was Calculi, or Latrunculi: The Poets sometimes term them Latrones, whence Latrunculus was at first derived: For Latro among the Ancients signified at first a Servant (as the Word Knave in English) and afterwards a Soldier.

Seneca has mentioned this Play oftener, perhaps, than any other Roman Author; particularly in one Place, he has a very remarkable Story, in which he designs to give us an Example of wonderful Resolution and Contempt of Death; though some will be more apt to interpret it as an Instance of insensible Stupidity. The Story is this: One Canius Julius (whom he extols very much on other Accounts) had been sentenced to Death by Caligula: The Centurions coming by with a Tribe of Malefactors, and ordering him to bear them Company to Execution, happened to find him engaged at this Game. Canius, upon his first Summons, presently fell to counting his Men, and bidding his Antagonist be sure not to brag falsely of the Victory after his Death; he only desired the Centurion to bear Witngs, that he had one Man upon the Board more than his Companion; and so very readily joined himself to the poor Wretches that were going to suffer (a).

But the largest and the most accurate Account of the Latrunculi, given us by the Ancients, is to be met with in the Poem to Piso; which some will have to be Ovid's, others Lucan's, and many the Work of an unknown Author.

(a) Seneca de Tranquil. Animi, cap. 14.

The Tali and Tesseræ, by Reason of so many Passages in Authors equally applicable to both, have oftentimes been confounded with one another, and by some distinguished as a separate Game from the Lusus aleæ, or Dice; whereas, properly speaking, the Greeks and Romans had two Sorts of Games at Dice, the Ludus talorum, or Play at Cock-all, and the Ludus tesserarum, or what we call Dice. They played at the first with four Tali, and at the other with three Tesseræ. The Tali had but four Sides, marked with four opposite Numbers; one Side with a Tres, and the opposite with a Quatre; one with an Ace, and the contrary with a Six. The Dice had six Faces, four marked with the same Number as the Tali, and the two others with a Deux and a Cinq, always one against the other; so that in both Plays the upper Number and the lower, either on the Talus or Tesseræ, constantly made seven.

There were very severe Laws in Force against these Plays, forbidding the Use of them at all Seasons, only during the Saturalia; though they gamed ordinarily at other Times, notwithstanding the Prohibition. But there was one Use made of them at Feasts and Entertainments, which perhaps did not fall under the Extent of the Laws; and that was to throw Dice, who should command in Chief, and have the Power of prescribing Rules at a Drinking Bout; who in Horace is called Arbiter Bibendi.

They threw both the Tali and the Tesseræ out of a long Box, for which they had several Names, as Fritillum, Pyrgus, Turricula, Orcæ, &c.

There are many odd Terms scattered up and down in Authors, by which they signified their fortunate and unfortunate Cast; we may take Notice of the best and the worst. The best Cast with the Tali was, when there came up four different Numbers, as Tres, Quatre, Six, Ace: The best with the Dice was three Sices; the common Term for both was Venus or Bu-filicus; the poorest Cast in both having the Name of Camis. Persius opposes the Senio and the Canicula, as the best and worst Chances:

——— *Quid dexter senio ferrit,
Scire erat in votis; dammosa canicula quantum
Raderet, angustæ collo non fallier Orcæ.* Sat. iii. 48.

But then my Study was to cog the Dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky Six;

To

To shun Ames-ſee that ſwept my Stakes away,
And watch the Box, for Fear they ſhould convey False Bones, and put upon me in the Play.

[Mr. Dryden.

The wiſer and ſeverer Romans thought this ſedentary Diverſion fit only for aged Men, who could not ſo well employ themſelves in any ſtirring Recreation. Let them (ſays old Cato in Tully) have their Armour, their Horſes and their Spears; let them take their Club and their Javelin; let them have their ſwimming Matches and their Races, ſo they do but leave us, among the numerous ſports, the Tali and the Tofferae. But the general Corruption of Manners made the Caſe quite otherwiſe: Juvenal xiv. 4.

*Si damnoſa ſenem juvat alea, ludit & heres
Bullatus, parvoque eadem movet arma fritillo.*

If Gaming does an aged Sire entice,
Then my young Maſter ſwiftly learns the Vice,
And ſhakes, in Hanging ſleeves, the little Box and Dice.

[Mr. Dryden.

Nor was it probable, that this Game ſhould be practiſed with any Moderation in the City, when the Emperors were commonly profeſſed Admirers of it. Augustus himſelf played unreaſonably without any Regard to the Time of the Year (a). But the great Maſter of this Art was the Emperor Claudius, who by his conſtant Practice (even as he rid about in his Chariot) gained ſo much Experience, as to compoſe a Book on the Subject. Hence Seneca, in his ſatirical Relation of the Emperor's Apotechſis, when, after a great many Adventures, he has at laſt brought him to Hell, makes the Infernal Judges condemn him (as the moſt proper Punishment in the World) to play continually at Dice with a Box that had the Bottom out; which kept him always in Hopes, and yet always balked his Expectations:

*Nam quæties miſſuræ erat resonante fritillo,
Utroque pulſuſto juſſibat tiffura fundo;
Cumque recubitos auderet mittere talos,
Luſus ſanctis ſenſer, ſemperque potenti,*

(a) Suet. v. A-g. cap. 71.

*Decepere fidem : refugit, digitosque per ipsos
Fallax assiduo dilabitur alca furto.
Sic cum jam summi tanguntur culmina montis,
Irrita Sisyphio voluntur pendera collo.*

For whenſoe'er he ſhook the Box to caſt,
The rattling Dice delude his eager Haſte :
And if he try'd again, the waggiſh Bone
Inſenſibly was through his Fingers gone ;
Still he was throwing, yet he ne'er had thrown.
So weary Sisyphus, when now he ſees
The welcome 'Top, and feeds his joyful Eyes,
Straight the rude Stone, as cruel Fate commands,
Falls ſadly down, and meets his reſtleſs Hands.

The Ancients had four Sorts of Pilæ or Balls uſed for Exerciſe and Diverſion. The Follis or Balloon which they ſtruck about with their Arm, guarded for that Purpoſe with a wooden Bracer : Or, if the Balloon was little, they uſed only their Fiſts. The Pila Trigonalis, the ſame as our common Balls ; to play with this there uſed to ſtand three Perſons in a Triangle, ſtriking it round from one to another ; he who firſt let it come to the Ground was the Loſer (a). Paganica, a Ball ſtuffed with Feathers, which Martial thus deſcribes : xiv. 45.

*Hæc quæ difficili turget Paganica pluma,
Folle minus laxa eſt, & minus arcta pila.*

The laſt Sort was the Harpastum, a harder Kind of Ball, which they played with, dividing into two Companies, and ſtriving to throw it into one another's Goals, which was the conquering Caſt.

The Game at Par impar, or even and odd, is not worth taking Notice of any farther than to obſerve, that it was not only proper to the Children, as it is generally fancied : For we may gather from Suetonius, that it was ſometimes uſed at Feaſts and Entertainments, in the ſame Manner as the Dice and Cheſs (b).

The Trochus has been often thought the ſame as the Turbo, or 'Top ; or elſe of like Nature with our Billiards : But both theſe

(a) Dacier on Horace, Book 2. Sat. 2.

(b) Sueton, in Agroſt. cap. 71.

Opinions are now exploded by the Curious. The Trochus therefore was properly a Hoop of Iron, five or six Feet Diameter, set all over in the Inside with Iron Rings. The Boys and young Men used to whirl this along, as our Children do wooden Hoops, directing it with a Rod of Iron, having a Wooden Handle; which Rod the Græcians called ἐλατήρ, and the Romans, Rodius. There was Need of great Dexterity to guide the Hoop right. In the mean Time, the Rings, by the Clattering which they made, not only gave the People Notice to keep out of the Way, but contributed very much to the Boys Diversion (a). We must take Care not to think this only a childish Exercise, since we find Horace (b) ranking it with other manly Sports;

Ludere qui nescit, campestribus abstinet armis, Indoctrinæ pilæ, disciæ, trochivæ quiescit.

(b) De Art. Poet.

C H A P. II.

Of the Circensian Shows, and first of the Pentathlum, the Chariot Races, the Ludus Trojæ, and the Pyrrhica Saltatio.

IT is hard to light on any tolerable Division which would take in all the publick Sports and Shows; but the most accurate seems to be that which ranks them under two Heads, Ludi Circenses, and Ludi Scenici: But because this Division is made only in Respect of the Form and Manner of the Solemnities, and of the Place of Action, there is Need of another to express the End and Design of their Institution; and this may be Ludi Sacri, Potivi, and Funebres.

The Circensian Plays may very well include the Representations of Sea-fights, and Sports performed in the Amphitheatres: For the former were commonly exhibited in the Circus fitted for that Use; and when we meet with the Naumachia, as Places distinct from the Circus's, we suppose the Structure to have been of the same Nature. And as to the Amphitheatres, they they were erected for the more convenient Celebration of some particular Shows, which used before to be presented in the Circus's, so that, in the Extent of the Head, we may inform ourselves of the Pentathlon, of the Chariot Races, of the Ludus Trojæ, of the Shows of wild Beasts, of the Combats of the Gladiators, and of the Naumachia.

The Pentathlon, or Quinquetium, as most of their other Sports, was borrowed from the Græcian Games; the five Exercises that composed it were Running, Wrestling, Leaping, Throwing, and Boxing. The two last have something particularly worth our Notice; the former of them being sometimes performed with the Discus, and the other with the Cestus. The Discus, or Quoit, made of Stone, Iron, or Copper; five or six Fingers broad, and more than a Foot long, inclining to an oval Five: they sent this to a vast Distance, by the Help of a leathern Thong tied round the Person's Hand that threw. Several learned Men have fancied, that, instead of the aforesaid Thong, they made Use of a Twist or Brede of Hair; but it is possible they might be deceived by that Passage of Claudian:

*Quis melius vibrata puer vertigine molli
Membra rotet? vertat quis marmora crine supino?*

What Youth could wind his Limbs with happier Care?
Or fling the Marble Quoit with toss'd-back Hair?

Where the Poet, by crine supino, intends only to express the extreme Motion of the Person throwing; it being very natural on that Account to cast back his Head, and so make the Hair fly out behind him (a).

Homer has made Ajax and Ulysses both great Artists at this Sport; and Ovid, when he sings in Apollon and Hyacinth playing at it, gives an elegant Description of the Exercise:

*Corpora vesto levant, & succo pinguis olive Splendescunt, latique incunt certamina disci;
Quem prius aerias libratum Phæbus in auras
Misit, & oppositus disjecit pondere nubes.
Decidit in solidam longo post tempore terram
Pondus, & exhibuit junctam cum viribus artem (b).*

(a) Dacier on Hierac, Book 1. Od. 3.

(b) Metamorphos. 10.

They ſtrip, and waſh their naked Limbs with Oil;
 To whirl the Quoit, and urge the Sportive Toil.
 And firſt the God his well-poiſ'd Marble flung,
 Cut the weak Air, and bore the Clouds along:
 Sounding at laſt, the maſſy Circle fell,
 And ſhow'd his Strength a Rival to his Skill.

Scaliger, who attributes the Invention of the whole Pentathlon to the rude Country People; is of Opinion, that the Throwing the Difcus is but an Improvement of their old Sport of caſting their Sheep-Hooks: This Conjecture ſeems very likely to have been borrowed from a Paſſage of Homer: Il. Ψ. 845.

Ὅσσον τίς τ' ἔρριψε καλαύροτα βεκόλος ἀνὴρ;
 Ἡ δέ θ' ἐλισσμένη πέταται διὰ βῆς ἀγροαίας,
 Ὅσσον παντὸς ἀγῶνος ὑπέρβαλε.

As when ſome ſturdy Hind his Sheep-hook throws,
 Which, whirling, lights among the diſtant Cows;
 So far the Hero caſts o'er all the Marks.

And indeed, the Judgment of the ſame Critick, that theſe Exerciſes owe their Original to the Life of Shepherds, is no more than what his admired Virgil has admirably taught him in the ſecond Georgick: v. 27.

*Ipſe dies agitat Feſtos; ſubitusque per herbam
 Ignis ubi in medio, & Socii cratera coronant,
 Te libans Lenæ vocat, pecoriſque magiſtris
 Velocis jaculi certamina ponit in ulmo;
 Corporaque agreſti nudat prædura paleſtro.*

When any rural Holy-days invite
 His Genius forth to innocent Delight;
 On Earth's fair Bed, beneath ſome ſacred Shade,
 Amidſt his equal Friends careleſſly laid,
 He ſings thee, Bacchus, Patron of the Vine.
 The Beechen Bowl foams with a Flood of Wine;
 Not to the Loſs of Reaſon, or of Strength,
 To active Games, and manly Sports at length

Their

Their Mirth ascends; and with full Veins they see Who can the best at better Trials be.

[Mr Cowley.

The Cestus were either a Sort of leathern Guards for the Hands, composed of Thongs, and commonly filled with Lead or Iron to add Force and Weight to the Blow: Or, according to others, a Kind of Whirlbats or Bludgeons of Wood, with Lead at one End: Though Scaliger censures the last Opinion as ridiculous; and therefore he derives the Word from νέσος, a Girdle or Belt (a). This Exercise is most admirably described by Virgil, in the Combat of Dares and Entellus: Æneid 5. The famous Artist at the Cestus was Eryx of Sicily, overcome at last at his own Weapons by Hercules. Pollux too was as great a Master of this Art, as his Brother Castor at Encounters on Horseback. The Fight of Pollux and Amytus, with the Cestus, is excellently related by Theocritus: Idyllium 30.

The CHARIOT-RACES occur as frequently as any of the Circensian Sports. The most remarkable Thing belonging to them was the Factions or Companies of the Charioteers; according to which the whole Town was divided, some favouring one Company, and some another. The four ancient Companies were the Prasina, the Rufata, the Alba or Albata, and the Veneta; the Green, the Red, the White, and the Sky-coloured or Sea-coloured. This Distinction was taken from the Colour of their Liveries, and is thought to have borne some Allusion to the four Seasons of the Year; the first resembling the Spring, when all Things are green; the next, the fiery Colour of the Sun in the Summer; the third, the Hoar of Autumn; and the last, the Clouds of Winter. The Prasina and the Veneta are not so easy Names as the other two; the former is derived from πράσινον, a Leek, and the other from Veneti, or the Venetians, a People that particularly affect that Colour. The most taking Company were commonly the Green, especially under Caligula, Nero, and the following Emperors, and in the Time of Juvenal, as he hints in his eleventh Satire, and with a fine Stroke of his Pen handsomely censures the strange Pleasure which the Romans took in the Sights: 103.

——— visibi pæce
Immensæ nimisæque licet si dicere plebis.

(a) De Re Pœtica, lib. 1, cap. 22.

*Totam hodie Romam circus capit, & fragor aurem, Percutit, eventum viridis quo colligo panni :
Nam si deficeret, mœstam attonitamque videres
Hanc urbem, veluti Cannarum in pulvere victis
Consulibus.* —————

This Day all Rome (if I may be allowed,
Without Offence to such a numerous Crowd;
To say all Rome) will in the Circus sweat,
Echoes already to their Shouts repeat.
Metyinks I hear the Cry———*Away, away,
The Green have won the Honour of the Day.*
Oh! should the Sports be but one Year forborn,
Rome would in 'Tears her lov'd Diversion mourn;
And that would now-a Cause of Sorrow yield,
Great as the Loss of Cannæ's fatal Field.

[Mr. Congreve.]

The Emperor Domitian, as Suetonius informs us, added two new Companies to the former, the Golden and the Purple (a). Xiphilin calls them the Golden and the Silver; but this seems to be a Mistake, because the Silver Liveries would not have been enough to distinguish from the White. But these new Companies were soon after laid down again by the following Emperors (b).

In ordinary Reading, we meet only with the Bigæ and the Quadrigæ; but they had sometimes their Sejuges, Septemjuges, &c. And Suetonius assures us, that Nero, when he was a Performer in the Olympick Games, made Use of a Decemjugis, a Chariot drawn with ten Horses coupled together (c). The same Emperor sometimes brought in Pairs of Camels to run the Circus, instead of Horses (d). And Heliozabalus obliged Elephants to the same Service (e).

The Races were commonly ended at seven Turns round the Milæ, though, upon extraordinary Occasions, we now and then meet with fewer Heats. In the like Manner the usual Number of Missus, or Matches, were twenty-four, though sometimes a far greater Number were exhibited. For Suetonius tells us, that the Emperor Domitian presented an hundred Matches in one Day (f). De la Cerda will have us believe it is not meant of the Number of Matches, but only of the Chariots, so as to make no more than twenty-five Missus's: But his Opinion is not taken Notice of by the Criticks who have commented on Suetonius. Servius (a) on that Verse of Virgil, Geor. iii. 18.

(a) Epist. l. vii. cap. 7. (b) L. ff. Com. in locum. (c) Suet. Ner. cap. 24.

Centum quadrijugos agitabo ad flumina currus, takes Occasion. to inform us, that anciently there were always twenty-five Matches of Chariots, four in every Match, so as to make a hundred in all. The last Missus was set out at the Charge of the People, who made a Gathering for that Purpose; and was therefore called Ærarius: But, when this Custom of a supernumerary Missus was laid aside, the Matches were no more than twenty-four at a Time; yet the last four Chariots still kept the Name of Missus ærarius.

The Time when the Races should begin was anciently given Notice of by Sound of Trumpet. But afterwards the common Sign was the Mappa, or Napkin hung out at the Prætor's, or the chief Magistrate's Seat. Hence Juvenal calls the Megalensian Games.

— Megalensiæ spectacula mappæ.

Sat. xi. 191.

The common Reason given for this Custom is, that Nero being once at Dinner, and the People making a great Noise, desiring that the Sports might begin, the Emperor threw the Napkin he had in his Hand out of the Window, as a Token that he had granted their Request (b).

The Victors in these Sports were honoured with Garlands, Coronets, and other Ornaments, after the Græcian Manner; and very often with considerable Rewards in Money: Inasmuch that Juvenal makes one eminent Charioteer able to buy a hundred Lawyers.

— Hinc centum patrimonia caufidicorum.

Parte alia solum ruffati pone Lacertæ.

Sat. vii. 113.

It has been already hinted, that they reckoned the Conclusion of the Race, from the passing by the Meta the seventh Time: And this Propertius expressly confirms, Book 2. Eleg. 94.

(a) Ad Cicer. 3.

(b) Coffindor. lib. Epist. 5.

*Aut prius infesto deposcit præmia cursu,
Septima quam metam triverit arte rota.*

What Charioteer would with the Crown be grac'd,
'Ere his seventh Wheel the Mark has lightly pass'd?

So that the greatest Specimen of Art and Sleight appears to have been to avoid the Meta handsomely, when they made their Turns, otherwise the Chariot and the Driver would come into great Danger as well as Disgrace :

————— Metaque fervidis
Evitata rotis. Hor. Od. 1.

On this Account it is, that Theocritus, when he gives a Relation of the Exercises in which they instructed young Hercules, assigns him in this Point, as a Matter of the greatest Consequence, his own Father for his Tutor :

Ἴωππος δ' ἐξελάσασθαι ὑφ' ἄρματι καὶ περὶ νύσσαν
Ἀσφαιδῶς κάμπισιν τερχῶ σέλιγα φυλάξαι,
Ἀμφεβούων ὃν παῖδα φίλα φρονέων ἐδίδασκεν,
Ἀνίος, ἐπὶ μάλα πολλὰ δῶκεν ἐξέρατ' ἀγώνων
Ἄριον ἐν ἵπποβύτῳ κειμήλια καὶ οἱ ἀσχεῖς
Δίφρονι ἵφ' ὧν ἐπέβαινε, χρόνον δίδυσσαν ἱμάντας. Εἰδύλ. κδ. 117.

To drive the Chariot and with steady Skill
To turn, and yet not break the bending Wheel,
Amphitrio kindly did instruct his Son :
Great in that Art ; for he himself had won
Vall perious Prizes on the Argive Plains :
And tho' the Chariot which he drove remains,
N'er hurt th' Count, tho' Time had broke the falling Reins.

[Mr. Creech.]

They who desire to be informed of the exact Manner of these Races, which certainly were very noble and diverting, may possibly receive as much Pleasure and Satisfaction from the Description which Virgil has left us of them in Short, as they could expect from the Sight itself. Georg. iii. 103.

Hast thou beheld, when from the Goal they start,
The youthful Charioteers with beating Heart,
Rush to the Race; and panting scarcely bear
Th' extremes of fev'rish Hopes and chilling Fear;
Stoop to the Reins, and lash with all their Force;
The flying Chariot kindles in the Course.
And now a-low, and now a-loft they fly,
As borne thro' Air, and seem to touch the Sky:
No Stop, no Stay; but Clouds of Sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the Follower's Eyes;
The hindmost blows the Foam upon the first:
Such is the Love of Praise, and honourable Thirst.
[Mr. Dryden.]

The Troja, or Ludus Trojæ, is generally referred to the Invention of Ascanius. It was celebrated by Companies of Boys neatly dressed, and furnished with little Arms and Weapons, who mustered in the publick Circus. They were taken, for the most Part, out of the noblest Families; and the Captain of them had the honourable Title of Princeps Juventutis; being sometimes next Heir to the Empire, and seldom less than the Son of a principal Senator. This Custom is so very remarkable, that it would be an unpardonable Omission not to give the whole Account of it in Virgil's own Words; especially, because the Poet, using all his Art and Beauties on the Subject, as a Compliment to Augustus, (a great Admirer of the Sport) has left us a most inimitable Description.

Æneid. 5. Ver. 545.

At pater Æneas, nondum certamine misso,
 Custodem ad sese comitemque impubis Iuli
 Epytidem vocat, & fidam sic fatur ad aurem :
 Vade age, & Ascanio, si jam puerile paratum
 Agmen habet secum, curusque instruxit equorum,
 Ducat arvo turmas, & sese ostendat in armis,
 Dic, ait. Ipse omnem longo decedere circo
 Infusum populum, & campos jubet esse patentes.
 Incedunt pueri, pariterque ante ora parentum
 Frænotis lucent in equis : quos omnis euntes
 Trinacriæ mirata fremit Trojæque juventus.
 Omnibus in morem tonsa coma pressa corona :
 Ornea bina ferunt præfixa hastilia ferro ;
 Pars lœves humero pharetras : It pectore summo
 Flexilis obtorti per collum circulus auri.
 Tres equitum numero turmæ, ternique vagantur
 Duces : Pueri his seni quemque secuti,
 Agmine portito fulgent paribusque Magistris.
 Una acies juvenum, ducit quam parvus evantem
 (Nomen avi referens) Prianius, tua clara, Polite,
 Progenies, auctura Italos ; quem Thracius albis
 Portat capus bicolor maculis : vestigia primi
 Alba pedis, frontemque ostentans arduus albam.
 Alter Atys, genus unde Atti duxere Latini :
 Parvus Atys, pueroque puer dilectus Iulo.
 Extremus, formaque ante omnes pulcher Iulus
 Sidonio est invehit equo ; quem candida Dido
 Esse sui sed rat monumentum & signus amoris.
 Cætera Trinacriis pulvis senioris Acstæ
 Fortur equis.
 Excipiunt plausu pavidos, gaudentque tuentes
 Dardanidae, veterumque arcessunt ora parentum.
 Postquam omnem cæti confissa, & oculosque suorum
 Instraverit in equis : signum cornu paratis
 Epytides laqueæ claudit, inspernitque sigillo.
 Olli depingere parces, atque comma Terni
 Inductis salvere chelys : & cunctique vocati
 Convertere vias, insperantque sua turba
 Inde alios incertæ cœtus, alioque recessus,

*Adversus spatiiis, alternosque orbibus orbes
 Impediunt, pugnaeque cient simulacra sub armis :
 Et nunc terga fugae nudant, nunc spicula vertunt
 Insensi, facta pariter nunc pace feruntur :
 Ut quondam Creta fertur labyrinthus in alta
 Parietibus textum caesis iter, ancipitemque
 Mille viis habuisse dolum, qua signa sequendi
 Falleret indeprensus & irremeabilis error.
 Haud aliter Teucram nati vestigia cursu
 Impediunt, texuntque fugas, & praelia ludo :
 Delphinum similes, qui per maria humida nando
 Carpathium Libycumque secant luduntque per undas.
 Hunc morem, hos cursus, atque haec certamina primus
 Aescanius, longam muris cum cingeret Albam,
 Rettulit, & priscos docuit celebrare Latinos ;
 Quo puer ipse modo, secum quo Troia pubes,
 Albani docuere suos : hinc maxima porro
 Accepit Roma, & patrium servavit honorem :
 Trojaque nunc pueri, Trojanum dicitur agmen.*

But Prince Aeneas, e'er the Games were done,
 Now call'd the wise Instructor of his Son,
 The good Epytides, whose faithful Hand
 In noble Arts the blooming Hero train'd :
 To whom the Royal Chief his Will declar'd,
 Go bid Aescanius, if he stands prepar'd
 To march his youthful Troops, begin the Course,
 And let his Grandfire's Shade commend his growing Force.
 Thus he ; and ordered straight the swarming Tide
 To clear the Circus ; when from every Side
 Crowds bear back Crowds, and leave an open Space,
 Where the new Pomp in all its Pride might pass.
 The Boys move on, all glittering lovely bright,
 On well rein'd Steeds in their glad Parents Sight.
 Wond'ring, the Trojan and Sicilian Youth
 Crown with Applause their Virtue's early Growth,
 Their flowing Hair close flow'ry Chaplets grace,
 And two fair Spears their eager Fingers press.
 Part bear gay Quivers, on their Shoulders hung,
 And Twists of bending Gold lie wreath'd along
 Their Purple Vest ; which at the Neck begun,
 And down their Breasts in shining Circles run.

Three lovely Troops three beauteous Captains led,
 And twice six Boys each hopeful Chief obey'd.
 The first gay Troop young Priam marshals on,
 Thy Seed, Polites, not to Fame unknown,
 That with Italian Blood shall join his own:
 Whose kinder Genius, rip'ning with his Years,
 His wretched Grandfire's Name to better Fortune bears.
 A Thracian Steed, with Spots of spreading White
 He rode, that paw'd, and crav'd the promis'd Fight.
 A lovely White his hither Fetlock stains;
 And white his high erected Forehead shines.
 And next with stately Pace young Atys mov'd,
 Young Atys, by the young Ascanius lov'd.
 From this great Line the noble Attian Stem,
 In Latium nurs'd, derive their ancient Name,
 The third with his Command Ascanius grac'd;
 Whose Godlike Looks his Heavenly Race confess'd;
 So beautiful, so brave, he shone above the rest.
 His sprightly Steed from Sidon's Pasture came,
 The noble Gift of the fair Tyrian Dame,
 And fruitless Pledge of her undappy Flame.
 The rest Sicilian Coursers all bestrode,
 Which old Acestes on his Guests bestow'd.
 Them, hot with beating Hearts, the Trojan Crew
 Receive with Shouts, and with fresh Pleasure view;
 Discov'ring in the Lines of every Face
 Some venerable Funder of their Race.
 And now the youthful Troop their Round had made,
 Panting with Joy, and all the Crowd survey'd;
 When sage Egyptides, to give the Sign,
 Crack'd his long Whip, and made the Course begin.
 At once they start, and spur with artful Speed,
 'Till in the Troops the little Chiefs divide
 The close Battalion: Then at once they turn,
 Commanded back; while from their Fingers borne,
 Their hostile Darts a-loft upon the Wind
 Fly shivering: Then in circling Numbers join'd,
 The manag'd Coursers with due Measures bound,
 And run the rapid Ring, and trace the mazy Round.
 Files facing Files, their bold Companions dare,
 And wheel and charge, and urge the sportive War.
 Now Flight they feign, and naked Backs expose;
 Now with turn'd Spears drive headlong on the Foes;
 And now, confed'rate grown, in peaceful Ranks they close.

As Crete's fam'd Labyrinth to a thousand Ways,
And thousand darken'd Walls the Guest conveys :
Endless, inextricable Rounds amuse,
And no kind Track the doubtful Passage shews.
So the glad Trojan Youth their winding Course
Sporting pursue, and charge the rival Force.
As sprightly Dolphins in some calmer Road
Play round the silent Waves, and shoot along the Flood,
Acanius, when (the rougher Storms o'erblown)
With happier Fates he rais'd fair Alba's Town ;
This youthful Sport, this solemn Race renew'd,
And with new Rites made the plain Latins proud.
From Alban Sires th' hereditary Game
To matchless Rome by long Succession came :
And the fair Youth in this Diversion train'd,
Troy they still call, and the brave Trojan Band.

Lazius, in his Commentaries de Repub. Romana, fancies the Justs and Tournaments, so much in Fashion about two or three hundred Years ago, to have owed their Original to this Ludus
Trojae, and that Tournamenta is but a Corruption of Trojamenta.
And the learned and noble Du Fresnoe acquaints us that many are of the same Opinion. However, though the Word may perhaps be derived with more Probability from the French Tourner, to turn round with Agility; yet the Exercises have so much Resemblance, as to prove the one an Imitation of the other.

The Pyrrhice, or Saltatio Pyrrhica, is commonly believed to be the same with the Sport already described. But, besides that none of the Ancients have left any tolerable Grounds for such a Conjecture, it will appear a different Game, if we look a little into its Original, and on the Manner of the Performance: The Original is, by some, referred to Minerva, who led up a Dance in her Armour, after the Conquest of the Titans :
By others to the Curetes, or Corybantes, Jupiter's Guard in his Cradle; who leaped up and down, clashing their Weapons, to keep old Saturn from hearing the Cries of his infant Son. Pliny attributes the Invention to Pyrrhus, Son to Achilles, who instituted such a Company of Dancers at the Funeral of his Father (a). However, that it was very ancient is plain from

(a) Nat. Hist. lib. 57.

Homer; who, as he hints at it in several Descriptions, so particularly he makes the exact Form and Manner of it to be engraved on the Shield of Achilles, given him by Vulcan. The Manner of the Performance seems to have consisted chiefly in the nimble turning of the Body, and shifting every Part, as if it were done to avoid the Stroke of an Enemy: And therefore this was one of the Exercises in which they trained the young Soldiers. Apuleius describes a Pyrrhick Dance, performed by young Men and Maids together (a); which alone would be enough to distinguish it from the Ludus Trojæ. The best Account we meet with of the Pyrrhick Dance is in Claudian's Poem on the sixth Consulship of Honorius:

*Armatus hic sæpe choros, certaue vagandi
 Textas lege fugas, inconfususque recursus,
 Et pulchras errorum artes, jocundaue Martis
 Cernimus: insonuit cum verbere signa magister,
 Mutatosque edant pariter tot pectora motus,
 In latus allisis clypeis, aut rursus in altum
 Vibratis: grave parma sonat mucronis acuti
 Verbere, & umbonum pulsu modulante resultans
 Ferreus alterno concentus clauditer ense.*

Here too the warlike Dancers bless our Sight,
 Their artful Wand'ring, and their Laws of Flight
 And unconfus'd Return, and inoffensive Fight. }
 Soon as Master's Crack proclaims their Prize,
 Their moving Breasts in tuneful Changes rise;
 The Shields salute their Sides, and straight are shown
 In Air high waving; deep the Targets groan
 Struck with alternate Swords, which thence rebound,
 And end the Concert and the sacred Sound.

The most ingenious Mr. Cartwright, Author of the Royal State, having Occasion to present a warlike Dance in that Piece, took the Measures of it from this Passage in Claudian, as the most exact Pattern Antiquity had left. And in the printed Play, he has given no other Description of that Dance, than by setting down the Verses whence it is copied.

(a) Allian. lib. 10.

Julius Scaliger tells us of himself, that while a Youth, he had often danced the Pyrrhick before the Emperor Maximilian, to the Amazement of all Germany: And that the Emperor was once so surprized at his warlike Activity, as to cry out, This Boy either was born in a Coat of Mail, instead of a Skin, or else has been rocked in one instead of a Cradle (a).

C H A P. III.

Of the Shows of Wild Beasts, and of the Naumachiaë.

THE Shows of Beasts were in general designed for the Honour of Diana, the Patroness of Hunting. For this Purpose, no Cost was spared to fetch the most different Creatures from the farthest Parts of the World; Hence Claudian, ——— ratibus pars ibat onustis

Per freta, vel fluvios; exanguis dextera torpet
Remigis, & proprium metuebat navita mercem.

——— Part in laden Vessels came,
 Borne on the rougher Waves, or gentler Stream;
 The fainting Slave let fall his trembling Oar;
 And the pale Master fear'd the Freight he bore.

And presently after,

——— Quodcunque tremendum est
Dentibus, aut insigne júbis, aut nobile cornu,
Aut rigidum setis capitur, decus omne timorque
Sylvarum, non caute latent, non mole resistunt.

- All that with potent Teeth command the Plain,
- All that run horrid with erected Mane,
- Or proud of stately Horns, or bristling Hair,
- At once the Forest's Ornament and Fear;

Torn

Torn from their Desarts by the Roman Power,
Nor Strength can save, nor craggy Dens secure.

Some Creatures were presented merely as strange Sight and Rarities, as the Crocodiles, and several outlandish Birds and Beasts; others for the Combat, as Lyons, Tygers, Leopards, &c. other Creatures, either purely for Delight, or else for the Use of the People, at such Times as they were allowed Liberty of catching what they could for themselves, as Hares, Deer, and the like. We may reckon up three Sorts of Diversions with the Beasts, which all went under the common Name of Venatio; the first, when the People were permitted to run after the Beasts, and catch what they could for their own Use; the second, when the Beasts fought with one another; and the last, when they were brought out to engage with Men.

When the People were allowed to lay hold on what they could get, and carry it off for their own Use, they called it Venatio dispersionis: This seems to have been an Institution of the Emperors. It was many Times presented with extraordinary Charge, and great Variety of Contrivances. The middle Part of the Circus being all over with Trees, removed thither by main Force, and fastened to huge Planks, which were laid on the Ground; these, being covered with Earth and Turf, represented a natural Forest, into which the Beasts being let from the Cavæ, or Dens under Ground, the People, at a Sign given by the Emperor, fell to hunting them, and carried away what they killed, to regale upon at Home. The Beasts usually given were Boars, Deer, Oxen, and Sheep. Sometimes all Kinds of Birds were presented after the same Manner. The usual Way of letting the People know what they should seize, was by scattering among them little Tablets or Tickets (Tesseras) which entitled those who caught them to the Contents of their Inscription. Sometimes every Ticket was marked with such a Sum of Money, payable to the first Taker. These Largesses were in general termed Missilia, from their being thrown and dispersed among the Multitude (a).

The Fights between Beasts were exhibited with great Variety; sometimes we find a Tyger matched with a Lion, sometimes a Lion with a Bull, a Bull with an Elephant, a Rhinoceros with a Bear, &c. Sometimes we meet with a Deer hunted on the Area by a Pack of Dogs. But the most wonderful Sight was, when by bringing the Water into the Amphitheatre, huge Sea Monsters were introduced to combat with Wild Beasts:

Nec nobis tantum sylvestria cernere monstra

Contigit, æquoreos ego cum certantibus urfis

Speſtavi vitulos.

Calphurn. Eclog. 7.

Nor Sylvan Monsters we alone have view'd,

But huge Sea-Calves, dy'd red with hostile Blood

Of Bears, lie flound'ring in the wond'rous Flood. }

The Men, that engaged with wild Beasts, had the common Name of Bestiarii. Some of these were condemned Persons, and have been taken Notice of in other Places (a): Others hired themselves at a set Pay, like the Gladiators; and, like them too, had their Schools where they were instructed and initiated in such Combats. We find several of the Nobility and Gentry many Times voluntarily undertaking a Part in these Encounters. And Juvenal acquaints us, that the very Women were ambitious of showing their Courage on the like Occasions, though with the Forfeiture of their Modesty:

Cum ————— Mævia Tuscum

Figat aprum, & nuda teneat venabula mamma. Sat. i. 22.

Or when with naked Breast the mannish Whore

Shakes the broad Spear against the Tuscan Boar.

And Martial compliments the Emperor Domitian very handsomely on the same Account. Speſtac. vi.

Belliger invictis quod Mars tibi sævit in armis,

Non satis est, Cæsar, sævit & ipsa Venus.

Prostratum vixta Nemees in valle leonem

Nobile & Herculeum fama can-lat opus.

Prisca fides taceat: Nam post tua munera, Cæsar,

Hæc jam sæminea vidimus ætæ manu.

Not Mars alone his bloody Arms shall wield;

Venus, when Cæsar bids shall take the Field,

Nor only wear the Breeches, but the Shield. }

The Savage Tyrant of the Woods and Plain,

By Hercules in doubtful Combat slain,

(a) Book 3. chap. 20.

Still fills our Ears within the Nemean Vale
 And musty Rolls the mighty Wonder tell :
 No Wonder now ; for Cæsar's Reign has shown
 A Woman's equal Power ; the same Renown
 Gain'd by the Distaff which the Club had won. }

Those who coped on the plain Ground with Beasts, commonly met with a very unequal Match ; and therefore, for the most Part, their safety consisted in the nimble Turning of their Body and leaping up and down to elude the Force of their Adversary. Therefore Martial may very well make a Hero of the Man who slew twenty Beasts, all let in upon him at once, though we suppose them to have been of the inferior Kind :

*Herculæ laudis numeretur gloria : plus est
 Bis denos pariter perdomuisse feras.*

Count the twelve Feats that Hercules had done ;
 Yet twenty make a greater, join'd in one.

But because this Way of engaging generally proved successful to the Beast, they had other Ways of dealing with them, as by assailing them with Darts, Spears, and other missile Weapons, from the higher Parts of the Amphitheatre, where they were secure from their Reach ; so as by some Means or other they commonly contrived to dispatch three or four hundred Beasts in one Show.

In the Show of wild Beasts exhibited by Julius Cæsar in his third Consulship, twenty Elephants were opposed to five hundred Footmen ; and twenty more with Turrets on their Backs, sixty Men being allowed to defend each Turret, engaged with five hundred Foot, and as many Horse (a).

The NAUMACHIÆ owe their Original to the Time of the first Punic War, when the Romans first initiated their Men in the Knowledge of Sea Affairs. After the Improvement of many Years they were designed as well for the gratifying the Sight, as for encreasing their naval Experience and Discipline ; and therefore composed one of the solemn Shows, by which the Magistrates or Emperors, or any Affecters of Popularity, so often made their Court to the People.

The usual Accounts we have of these Exercises seem to represent them as nothing else but the Image of a naval Fight.

(a) Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 8. cap. 1.

But it is probable that sometimes they did not engage in any hostile Manner, but only rowed fairly for the Victory. This Conjecture may be confirmed by the Authority of Virgil, who is acknowledged by all the Criticks, in his Descriptions of the Games and Exercises, to have had an Eye always to his own Country, and to have drawn them after the Manner of the Roman Sports. Now the Sea Contention, which he presents us with, is barely a Tryal of Swiftneſs in the Veſſels, and of Skill in managing the Oars, as is moſt admirably delivered in his fifth Book: 114.

*Prima pares incunt gravibus certamina remis
Quatuor ex omni dilecta claſſe carinae, &c.*

The Naumachiae of Claudius, which he preſented on the Fucine Lake before he drained it, deſerve to be particularly mentioned, not more for the Greatneſs of the Show, than for the Behaviour of the Emperor; who, when the Combatants paſſed before him with ſo melancholy a Greeting as, Ave Imperator, morituri te ſalutant, returned in Answer, Avete vos; which when they would gladly have interpreted as an Act of Favour, and a Grant of their Lives, he ſoon gave them to underſtand that it proceeded from a contrary Principle of barbarous Cruelty and Inſenſibility (a).

The moſt celebrated Naumachiae were thoſe of the Emperor Domitian; in which were engaged ſuch a vaſt Number of Veſſels as would have almoſt formed two complete Navies (b) for a proper Fight, together with a proportionable Channel of Water, equalling the Dimensions of a natural River. Martial has a very genteel Turn on this Subj: &c. Speſtac. 24.

*Si quis ades longis ſerus ſpectator ab oris,
Cui lux prima ſacri muneris iſta dies,
Ne te decipiat ratibus navalis Enyo,
Et par unda fretis: hic modo terra fuit.
Non credis? ſpectes dum laxent equora Martem;
Parva mora eſt, dices, hic modo pontus erat.*

Stranger, whoe'er from diſtant Parts arriv'd,
But this one ſacred Day in Rome haſt liv'd;
Miſtake not the wide Flood, and pompous Show
Of naval Combats: Here was Land but now.

(a) Sueton. Claud. c. 43. Tacit. An. XIII. (b) Sueton. in Domit. c. 4.

Is this beyond your Credit ? Only stay
 'Till from the Fight the Vessels bear away ;
 You'll cry with Wonder, Here but now was Sea !

It is related of the Emperor Heliogabalus, that, in a Representation of a naval Fight, he fill'd the Channel where the Vessels were to ride with Wine instead of Water (a). A Story scarce credible, though we have the highest Conceptions of his prodigious Luxury and Extravagance.

CHAP. IV.

Of the GLADIATORS.

THE first Rise of the Gladiators is referred to the ancient Custom of killing Persons at the Funerals of great Men. For the old Heathens, fancying the Ghosts of the Deceased to be satisfied, and rendered propitious by human Blood, at first they used to buy Captives, or untoward Slaves, and offered them at the Obsèques : Afterwards they contrived to veil over their impious Barbarity with the specious Show of Pleasure, and voluntary Combat ; and therefore training up such Persons as they had procured in some tolerable Knowledge of Weapons ; upon the Day appointed for the Sacrifices to the departed Ghosts, they obliged them to maintain a mortal Encounter at the Tombs of their Friends. The first Show of Gladiators *, exhibited at Rome, was that of M. and D. Brutus, upon the Death of their Father A. U. C. 490. in the Consulship of Ap. Claudius and M. Fulvius (b).

Within a little Time, when they found the People exceedingly pleased with such bloody Entertainments, they resolved to give them the like Diversion as soon as possible, and therefore it soon grew into a Custom, that not only the Heir of any great or rich Citizen newly deceased, but that all the principal Magistrates should take Occasions to present the People with these Shows, in order to procure their Esteem and Affection. Nay, the very Priests were sometimes the Exhibitors of such impious Pumps : for we meet with the Ludi

(b) Val. Max. lib. 2. cap. 4.

Pontificales

Pontificales in Suetonius (a), and with the Ludi Sacerdotales in Pliny (b).

As for the Emperors, it was so much their Interest to ingratiate themselves with the Commonalty, that they obliged them with these Shows almost upon all Occasions: As on their Birthday; at the Time of a Triumph, or after any signal Victory; at the Consecration of any publick Edifices; at the Games which several of them instituted to return in such a Term of Years; many others, which occur in every Historian.

And as the Occasions of these Solemnities were so prodigiously increased, in the same Manner was the Length of them, and the Number of the Combatants. At the first Show exhibited by the Bruti, it is probable there were only three Pair of Gladiators, as may be gathered from that of Aufonius:

*Tres primas Thracum pugnas, tribus ordine bellis.
Juniadae patrio inferias misere sepulchro.*

Yet Julius Cæsar in his Ædileship presented three hundred and twenty Pair (c). The excellent Titus exhibited a Show of Gladiators, wild Beasts, and Representations of Sea-fights, a hundred Days together (d): And Trajan, as averse from Cruelty as the former, continued the Solemnity of this Nature a hundred and twenty-three Days, during which he brought out a thousand Pair of Gladiators (e). Two thousand Men of the same Profession were listed by the Emperor Orto to serve against Vitellius. Nay, long before this, they were so very numerous, that, in the Time of the Cautilinarian Conspiracy, an Order passed to send all the Gladiators up and down into the Garrisons, for fear they should raise any Disturbance in the City (f), by joining with the disaffected Party. And Plutarch informs us, that the famous Spartacus, who at last gathered such a numerous Force as to put Rome under some unusual Apprehensions, was no more than a Gladiator, who, breaking out from a Show at Verona, with the Rest of his Gang, dared proclaim War against the Roman State (g).

In the mean Time, the wise and the better Romans were very sensible of the dangerous Consequences which a Corruption of this Nature might produce; and therefore Cicero presented a Law, that no Person should exhibit a Show of Gladiators within two Years before he appeared Candidate for an Office (a) Julius Caesar ordered, that only such a Number of Men of this Profession should be in Rome at a Time (b), Augustus decreed, that only two Shows of Gladiators should be presented in a Year, and never above sixty Pair of Combatants in a Show (c). Tiberius provided by an Order of Senate, that no Person should have the Privilege of gratifying the People with such a Solemnity, unless he was worth four hundred thousand Sesterties (d).

Nerva in a great Measure regulated this Affair, after the many Abuses of the former Emperors; but the Honour of entirely removing this Barbarity out of the Roman World, was reserved for Constantine the Great, which he performed about the Year of the Chr. 1067, nigh six hundred Years after their first Institution. Yet under Constantius, Theodosius, and Valentinian, the same cruel Humour began to revive, 'till a final Stop was put to it by the Emperor Honorius; the Occasion of which is given at large by the Authors of Ecclesiastical History.

Thus much may be proper to observe in general, concerning the Origin, Increase, and Restraint of this Custom. For our farther Information, it will be necessary to take particular Notice of the Condition of the Gladiators, of their several Orders or Kinds, and of their Manner of Duelling.

As for their Condition, they were commonly Slaves, or Captives; for it was an ordinary Custom to sell a disobedient Servant to the Lanistæ or the Instructors of the Gladiators, who, after they had taught them some Part of their Skill, let them out for Money at a Show. Yet the Freemen soon put in for a Share of this Privilege to be killed in Jest; and accordingly many Times offered themselves to live for the Amphitheatre, whence they had the Name of Aufiorati. Nay, the Knights and Noblemen, and even the Senators themselves at last were not ashamed to take up the same Profession, some to keep themselves from starving, after they had squandered away their Estates, and others to curry Favour with the Emperors: So that Augustus was forced to command by a publick Edict, that none of the Senatorian Order should turn Gladiators (e): And soon after, he laid the same Restraint on the Knights (f). Yet these Prohibitions were so little regarded by the following Princes, that Nero presented at one Show (if the Numbers in Suetonius are not corrupted) 400 Senators, and 600 of the Equestrian Rank (g).

(a) Cicero in Vatin. (V) Just. Conf. cap. 10. (c) Di. (d) Tacit. Ann. 4. (e) Di. lib. 48. (f) Sueton. Aug. cap. 43. Di. lib. 34. (g) Idem. Ner. cap. 12.

But all this will look like no Wonder, when, upon a farther Search, we meet with the very Women engaging in these publick Encounters, particularly under Nero and Domitian. Juvenal has exposed them very handsomely for this mannish Humour in his sixth Satyr, 254:

*Quale decus rerum, si conjugis auctio fiat,
Balteus & manicæ, & cristæ crurisque sinistri
Dimidium tegmen? vel si diversa movebit
Prælia, tu felix, ocreas vendente puella.
Hæ sunt quæ tenui sudant in cyclade: quarum
Delicias & panniculas bombycinus urit.
Adspice quo frenitum monstratos perferat ictus,
Et quanto galeæ curvetur pondere; quanta
Poplitibus sedeat quam densa fascia libro.*

Oh! what a decent sight 'tis to behold
All thy Wife's Magazine by Auction sold!
The Belt, the crested Plume, the several Suits
Of Armour, and the Spanish-Leather Boots!
Yet these are they that cannot bear the Heat
Of figur'd Silks, and under Sarsenet sweat.
Behold the strutting Amazonian Whore
She stands in Guard, with her right Foot before;
Her Coats tucked up, and all her Motions just,
She stamps, and then cries hah! at every Thrust.

[Mr. Dryden.]

Yet the Women were not the most inconsiderable Performers, for a more ridiculous Set of Combatants are still behind; and these were the Dwarfs, who encountering one another, or the Women, at these publick Diversions, gave a very pleasant Entertainment. Statius has left us this elegant Description of them: Syl. I. vi. 57.

*Hic audax subit ordo pumilorum,
Quos natura brevi statu peractos,
Nodosum semel in globum ligavit.
Edunt vulnera, consciuntque dextras,
Et mortem sibi, qua manu, minentur,
Ridet Mars pater, & cruenta Virtus;
Casuræque vagis græves rapinis,
Mirantur pumilos feroces.*

To

To mortal Combat next succeed
 Bold Fencers of the Pigmy Breed,
 Whom Nature, when she half had wrought,
 Not worth her farther Labour thought,
 But clos'd the rest in one hard Knot.
 With what a Grace they drive their Blow?
 And ward their Jolt-head from their Foe?
 Old Mars and rigid Virtue smile
 At their redoubted Champion's Toil.
 And Cranes, to please the Mob, let fly,
 Admir'd to see their Enemy
 So often by themselves o'ercome,
 Inspir'd with nobler Hearts at Rome.

The several Kinds of Gladiators worth observing were the Retiarii, the Secutores, the Allymillones, the Thracians, the Samnites, the Picini, the Effidarii, and the Andabatae. But, before we enquire particularly into the distinct Orders, we may take Notice of several Names attributed in common to some of every Kind upon various Occasions. Thus we meet with the Gladiatores Aferidiani, who engaged in the Afternoon, the chief Part of the Show being finished in the Morning. Gladiatores Fiscales, those who were maintained out of the Emperor's Fiscus, or private Treasury, such as Artian calls Καίσαρος πομπάρχης, Cæsar's Gladiators: Gladiatores Postulatitii, commonly Men of great Art and Experience, whom the People particularly desired the Emperor to produce: Gladiatores Catervarii, such as did not fight by Pairs, but in small Companies: Suetonius uses Catervarii Pugiles in the same Sense (a). Gladiatores Ordinarii, such as were presented according to the common Manner, and at the usual Time, and fought the ordinary Way; on which Account they were distinguished from the Catervarii; and the Postulatitii.

As for the several Kinds already reckoned up, they owed their Distinction to their Country, their Arms, their Way of fighting, and such Circumstances, and may be thus, in short, described:

The Retiarius was dressed in a short Coat, having a Fusina or Trident in his Left-hand, and a Net in his Right, with which he endeavoured to entangle his Adversary, and then with his Trident might easily dispatch him; on his Head he wore only a Hat tied under his Chin with a broad Ribbon. The Secutor was armed with a Buckler and a Helmet, wherein was the Picture of a Fish, in Allusion to the Net. His Weapon was a Scymetar, or Flax Supina. He was called Secutor, because if the Retiarius, against whom he was always matched, should happen to fail in casting his Net, his only Safety lay in Flight; so that in this Case he plied his Heels as fast as he could about the Place of Combat, 'till he had got his Net in Order for a second Throw: In the Mean Time this Secutor or Follower pursued him, and endeavoured to prevent his Design. Juvenal is very happy in the Account he gives us of a young Nobleman that scandalously turned Retiarius in the Reign of Nero: Nor is there any Relation of this Sort of Combat so exact in any other Author:

(a) Art. cap. 45.

Et illic

*Dedeus urbis habes: nec myrmillonis in armis,
Nec elypeo Graebum pugnantem aut salce supina,
(Dammat enim tales habitus, sed damnat & odit:)
Nee galea faciem abscondit, movet ecce tridentem,
Postquam librata pendentia retia dextra
Nequiequam effudit, nudum ad spectacula vultum
Erigit, & tota fugit agnosendus arena,
Credamus tunicae, de faucibus aurea eum se
Porrigit, & longo jaletur spira galero:
Ergo ignominiam graviorem pertulit omni
Vulnere, cum Graccho jussus pugnare secutor.* Sat. viii. 199.

Go to the Lists where Feasts of Arms are shown,
There you'll find Graebus from Patrician grown
A Fencer, and the Scandal of the Town. }
Nor will he the Myrmillo's Weapons bear,
'The modest Helmet he disdains to wear.
As Retiarius he attacks his Foe:
First waves his Trident ready for the Throw.
Next casts his Net, but neither levell'd right, }
He stares about, expos'd to publick Sight,
Then places all his Safety in his Flight.
Room for the noble Gladiator! see
His Coat and Hatband show his Quality.
Thus when at last the brave Myrmillo knew
'Twas Gracchus was the Wretch he did pursue,

To conquer such a Coward griev'd him more,
Than if he many glorious Wounds had bore.

[Mr. Stepney.

Here the Poet seems to make the Myrmillo the same as the Secutor, and thus all Comments explain him. Yet Lipsius will have the Myrmillones to be a distinct Order, who fought completely armed; and therefore he believes them to be the Crupellarii of Tacitus (a), so called from some old Gallick Word, expressing, that they could only creep along by Reason of their heavy Armour.

The Thracians made a great Part of the choicest Gladiators, that Nation having the general Repute of Fierceness and Cruelty beyond the rest of the World. The particular Weapon they used was the Sica, or Faulchion; and the Defence consisted in a Parma, or little round Shield, proper to their Country.

The Original of the Samnite Gladiators is given us by Livy: The Campanians, says he, bearing a great Hatred to the Samnites, they armed a Part of the Gladiators after the Fashion of that Country, and called them Samnites (b). What these Arms were, he tells us in another Place; they wore a Shield broad at the Top to defend the Breasts and Shoulders, and growing more narrow towards the Bottom, that it might be moved with the greater Convenience; they had a Sort of Belt coming over their Breasts, a Greave on their Left Foot, and a crested Helmet on their Heads; whence it is plain that Description of the Amazonian Fencer, already given from Juvenal, is expressly meant of assuming the Armour and Duty of a Samnite Gladiator:

*Balteus & manicae & cristæ, crurisque sinistri
Dimidium tegmen.*

The Pinnae which adorned the Samnite's Helmet, denominated another Sort of Gladiators, Pinnirapi, because, being matched with the Samnites, they used to catch at those Pinnae and bear them off in Triumph, as Marks of their Victory. Dr. Holiday takes the Pimirapus to be the same as the Retiarius (c).

Lipsius fancies the Procuratores, mentioned by Cicero in his Oration for P. Sextius, to have been a distinct Species, and that they were generally matched with the Samnites; though perhaps the Words of Cicero may be thought not to imply so much.

(a) Annal. lib. 5.

(b) Lib. 9.

(c) Illustration on Juvenal, Sat. 7.

The Hoplomachi, whom we meet with in Seneca (a) and Suetonius (b), may probably be the same either with the Samnites or Myrmilones, called by the Greek Name ὀπλομάχοι, because they fought in Armour.

The Essedarii, mentioned by the same Authors (c), and by Tully (d), were such as on some Occasions engaged one another out of Chariots, * though perhaps at * Esseda. other Times they fought on Foot like the rest. The Essedum was a Sort of Waggon, from which the Gauls and the Britons used to assail the Romans in their Engagements with them.

The Andabatae, or Ἀνδαβαται, fought on Horseback, with a Sort of Helmet that covered all the Face and Eyes, and therefore Andabatarum more pugnare, is to combat blindfold.

As to the Manner of the Gladiators Combats, we cannot apprehend it fully, unless we take in what was done before, and what after the Fight, as well as the actual Engagement. When any Person designed to oblige the People with a Show, he set up Bills in the publick Places, giving an Account of the Time, the Number of the Gladiators, and other Circumstances. This they called Munus pronunciare, or proponere; and the Libelli or Bills were sometimes termed Edicta; many Times, besides these Bills, they set up great Pictures, on which were described the Manner of the Fight, and the Effigies of some of the most celebrated Gladiators, whom they intended to bring out. This Custom is elegantly described by Horace, Book ii. Sat. vii. 95 :

*Vel cum Pausiaca torpes, insane, tabella,
Qui peccat, minus atque ego, cum Fulvi, Rutubæque,
Aut Placideiani contento poplite miror
Prælia, rubrica picta aut carbone, velut si
Re vera pugnent, feriant, vitentque moventes Arma viri?*

Or when on some rare Piece you wond'ring stand,
And praise the Colours, and the Master's Hand,
Are you less vain than I, when in the Street
The painted Canvas holds my ravish'd Sight;
Where with bent Knees the skilful Fencers strive
To speed their Pass, as if they mov'd alive;
And with new Sleights so well express'd engage,
That I amaz'd stand up, and think them on the Stage.

(a) Contravers. lib. 3. (b) 1a Calig. 3. (c) Senec. Epist. 39. Suton. Calig. 3 & Claud. 21. (d) In Epistolis.

At the appointed Day for the Show, in the first Place the Gladiators were brought out all together, and obliged to take a Circuit round the Arena in a very solemn and pompous Manner. After this they proceeded paria componere, to match them by Pairs, in which Care was used to make the Matches equal. Before the Combatants fell to it in earnest, they tried their Skill against one another with more harmless Weapons, as the Rudes, Spears without Heads, the blunted Swords, the Foils, and such-like. This Cicero admirably observes: Si in illo, ipso gladiatorio vitæ certamine, quo ferro decernitur, tamen ante congressum multa sunt, quæ non ad vulnus, sed ad speciem valere videantur; quanto magis hoc in Oratione expectandum est? If in the mortal Combats of the Gladiators, where the Victory is decided by Arms, before they actually engage, there are several Flourishes given, more for a Show of Art than a Design of hurting; how much more proper would this look in the Contention of an Orator? This Flourishing before the Fight was called in common Prælusio, or, in Respect to the Swords only, Ventilatio. This Exercise was continued, 'till the Trumpets sounding gave them Notice to enter on more desperate Encounters, and then they were said vertere Arma:

*Ita rem natam esse intelligo,
Necessum est versis armis depugnarier.*

Plaut.

The Terms of striking were Petere and Repetere: of avoiding a Blow, exire. Virg. Æn v. 438.

Corpore tela modo, atque oculis vigilantibus exit.

When any Person received a remarkable Wound, either his Adversary or the People used to cry out, habet, or hoc habet. This Virgil alludes to, Æneid. xii. 294.

—*Teloque orantem multa trabali
Desuper altus equo graviter ferit, atque ita fatur:
Hoc habet: hæc magnis melior data victima diviis.*

—Him, as much he pray'd,
With his huge Spear Messapus deeply struck
From his high Courser's Back, and chacing spoke,
He has it; and to this auspicious Blow
A nobler Victim the great Gods shall owe.

The

The Party who was worsted submitted his Arms, and acknowledged himself conquered; yet this would not save his Life, unless the People pleased, and therefore he made his Application to them for Pity. The two Signs of Favour and Dislike given by the People were, premere Pollicem, and vertere Pollicem, Phrases which the Criticks have quarrelled much about to little Purpose. But M. Dacier seems to have been more happy in his Explanation than his Predecessors. The former he takes to be a clenching of the Fingers of both Hands between one another, and so holding the two Thumbs upright close together. This was done to express their Admiration of the Art and Courage showed by both Combatants, and a Sign to the Conqueror to spare the Life of his Antagonist, as having performed his Part remarkably well. Hence Horace, to signify the extraordinary Commendation that a Man could give to one of his own Temper and Disposition, says, Ep. xviii. 66 :

Fautor utroque tuum laudabit pollice ludum,

And Meander has δακνύσας πῖλιν, to press the Fingers, a Custom on the Græcian Stage, designed for a Mark of Approbation, answerable to our Clapping.

But the contrary Motion, or bending back of the Thumbs, signified the Dissatisfaction of the Spectators, and authorized the Victor to kill the other Combatant outright for a Coward :

——— Verso pollice vulgi

Quemlibet occidunt populariter. Juv. Sat. 3. 36.

Where influenc'd by the Rabble's bloody Will,
With Thumbs bent back, they popularly kill,

Besides this Privilege of the People, the Emperors seem to have had the Liberty of saving whom they thought fit, when they were present at the Solemnity, and, perhaps, upon the bare Coming in of the Emperor into the Place of Combat, the Gladiators, who at that Instant had the worst of it, were deliver'd from farther Danger :

Cæsaris adventu tuta Gladiator arena

Exiit, & auxilium non leve vultus habet.

Martial.

Where Cæsar comes, the worsted Fencer lives,
And his bare Presence (like the Gods) reprieves.

After the Engagement there were several Marks of Favour conferred on the Victors, as many Times a Present of Money, perhaps gathered up among the Spectators, which Juvenal alludes to, Sat. 7:

Accipe Victori populus quod postulat aurum.

—————Take the Gains
A conqu'ring Fencer from the Crowd obtains.

But the most common Rewards were the Pileus and the Rudis: The former was given only to such Gladiators as were Slaves. for a Token of their obtaining Freedom. The Rudis seems to have been bestowed both on Slaves and Freemen, but with this Difference, that it procured for the former no more than a Discharge from any further Performance in Publick, upon which they commonly turned Lanistæ, spending their Time in training up young Fencers. Ovid calls it, tuta Rudis:

Tutaque deposito poscitur ense rudis.

But the Rudis, when given to such Persons as, being free, had hired themselves out for these Shows, restored them to a full Enjoyment of their Liberty. Both these Sorts of Rudiani, being excused from further Service, had a Custom to hang up their Arms in the Temple of Hercules, the Patron of their Profession, and were never called out again without their Consent. Horace has given us a full Account of this Custom, in his first Epistle to Mecænas:

*Prima dedit mihi, summa dicende camæna,
Spectatum satis Et donatum jam rude, quæris,
Mecænas, iterum antiquæ me includere ludæ.
Non eadem est ætas, non mores. Vejanus, armis Herculis ad p.ßem fixis, lat. abditus agro:
Ne p.ßum extrema totius exoret æcua.*

Mæcenæ, you whose Name and Title grac'd
 My early Labours, and shall crown my last:
 Now, when I've long engag'd with wish'd Success,
 And full of Fame, obtain'd my Writ of Ease;
 While sprightly Fancy fits with heavy Age,
 Again you'd bring me on the Stage.
 Yet wife Vejanus, hanging up his Arms
 To Hercules, yon little Cottage farms:
 Left he be forc'd, if giddy Fortune turns,
 To cringe to the vile Rabble, whom he scorns.

The learned Dacier, in his Observation on this Place, acquaints us, That it was a Custom for all Persons, when they laid down any Art or Employment, to consecrate the proper Instruments of their Calling to the particular Deity, who was acknowledged for the President of that Profession. And therefore the Gladiators, when thus discharged, hung up their Arms to Hercules, who had a Chapel by every Amphitheatre; and where there were no Amphitheatres, in Circo: And over every Place assigned to such manly Performances, there stood a Hercules with his Club.

We may take our Leave of the Gladiators with this excellent Passage of Cicero, which may serve in some Measure as an Apology for the Custom: Crudele Gladiatorum spectaculum & inhumanum nonnullis videri solet: & haud scio an non ita sit, ut nunc sit: tum vero fontes ferro depugnabant, auribus fortasse multæ, oculis quidem nulla poterat esse sortior contra dolorem & mortem disciplina (a). The Shows of Gladiators may possibly to some Persons seem barbarous and inhuman: And indeed, as the Case now stands, I cannot say that the Censure is unjust, But in those Times, when only guilty Persons compos'd the Number of Combatants, the Ear perhaps might receive many better Instructions; but it is impossible that any Thing, which affects our Eyes, should fortify us with more Success against the Assaults of Grief and Death.

CHAP. VII.

Of the LUDI SCENICI, or Stage-Plays: First of the Satires and the Mimick-Pieces, with the Rise and Advances of such Entertainments among the ROMANS.

THE LUDI SCENICI, or Stage-Plays, have been commonly divided into four Species, Satire, Mimick, Tragedy, and Comedy. The elder Scaliger will have Satire to have proceeded from Tragedy, in the same Manner as the Mimus from Comedy: But we are assured this was in Use at Rome, long before the more perfect Dramas had gained a Place on the Stage. Nor has the same excellent Critick been more happy in tracing the Original of this Sort of Poetry as far as Greece: For we cannot suppose it to bear any Resemblance to the Chorus, or Dance of Satires, which used to appear in the Theatres at Athens, as an Appendage to some of their Tragedies, thence called Satyrique. This Kind of Greek Farce was taken up purely in the Characters of Mirth and Wantonness, not admitting those sarcastical Reflections, which were the very Essence of the Roman Satire. Therefore Casaubon and Dacier, without casting an Eye towards Greece, make no Question but the Name is to be derived from Satura, a Roman Word, signifying full: The [u] being changed into an [i]; after the same Manner as optimus and maximus were afterwards spelled optimus and maximus. Satura, being an Adjective, must be supposed to relate to the Substantive Lanx, a Platter or Charger; such as they filled yearly with all Sorts of Fruit, and offered to their Gods at their Festivals, as the Primitive, or full Gatherings of the Season. Such an Expression might be well applied to this Kind of Poem, which was full of various Matter, and written on different Subjects. Nor are there wanting other Instances of the same Way of speaking; as particularly per Saturnum Sententia exquirere, is used by Sallust, to signify the Way of Voting in the Senate, when neither the Members were told, nor the Votes counted, but all gave their Suffrages promiscuously, and without observing an Order. And the Historic Satire, or per Saturnum, of Lucius, were nothing else but miscellaneous Tracts.

Tracts of History. The Original of the Roman Satire will lead us into the Knowledge of the first Representations of Persons, and the rude Effays towards Dramatick Poetry, in the rustick Ages of Rome; for which we are beholden to the accurate Research of Dacier, and the Improvement of him by Mr. Dryden.

During the Space of almost four hundred Years from the Building of the City, the Romans had never known any Entertainments of the Stage. Chance and Jollity first found out those Verses which they called Saturnian, because they supposed such to have been in Use under Saturn. And Fescennine, from Fescennia, a Town in Tuscany, where they were first practised. The Actors, upon Occasion of Merriment, with a gross and rustick Kind of Raillery, reproached one another, ex tempore with their Failings; and at the same Time were nothing sparing of it to the Audience. Somewhat of this Custom was afterwards retained in their Saturnalia, or Feast of Saturn, celebrated in December: At least all Kind of Freedom of Speech was then allowed to Slaves, even against their Masters: And we are not without some Imitation of it on our Christmas-Gambols. We cannot have a better Notion of this rude and unpolished Kind of Farce, than by imagining a Company of Clowns on a Holiday dancing lubberly, and upbraiding one another, in ex tempore Doggrel, with their Defects and Vices, and the Stories that were told of them in Bake-houses and Barbers Shops,

This rough-cast unhewn Poetry was instead of Stage-Plays, for the Space of a hundred and twenty Years together: But then, when they began to be somewhat better bred, and entered, as one may say, into the first Rudiments of civil Conversation, they left these Hedge Notes for another Sort of Poem, a little more polished, which was also full of pleasant Raillery, but without any Mixture of Obscenity. This new Species of Poetry appeared under the Name of Satire, because of its Variety, and was adorned with Compositions of Musick, and with Dances.

When Livius Andronicus, about the Year of Rome 514, had introduced the new Entertainments of Tragedy and Comedy, the People neglected and abandoned their old Diversion of Satires: But not long after they took them up again, and then they joined them to their Comedies, playing them at the End of the Dramas, as the French continue at this Day to act their Farces in the Nature of a separate Representation from their Tragedies.

A Year

A Year after Andronicus had opened the Roman Stage with his new Drama's, Ennius was born; who, when he was grown to Man's Estate, having seriously considered the Genius of the People, and how eagerly they followed the first Satires, thought it would be worth his while to refine upon the Project, and to write Satires, not to be acted on the Theatre, but read. The Event was answerable to his Expectation, and his Design being improved by Pacuvius, adorned with a more graceful Turn by Lucilius, and advanced to its full Height by Horace, Juvenal, and Perfius, grew into a distinct Species of Poetry, and has ever met with a kind Reception in the World. To the same Original we owe the other Sort of Satire, called Varronian, from the learned Varro, who first composed it. This was written freely, without any Restraint to Verse or Prose, but consisted of an Intermixture of both; of which Nature are the Satyricon of Petronius, Seneca's mock Deification of the Emperor Claudius, and Boethius's Consolations.

As for the Mimus, from Μίμησις to imitate, Scaliger defines it to be, a Poem imitating any Sort of Actions, so as to make them appear ridiculous (a). The Original of it he refers to the Comedies, in which, when the Chorus went off the Stage, they were succeeded by a Sort of Actors, who diverted the Audience for some Time with apish Postures, and antick Dances. They were not masked, but had their Faces smeared over with Soot, and dressed themselves in Lambskins, which are called Pescia in the old Verses of the Salii.

They wore Garlands of Ivy, and carried Baskets full of Herbs and Flowers to the Honour of Bacchus, as had been observed in the first Institution of the Custom at Athens. They acted always barefoot, and were thence called Planipedes.

These Diversions being received with universal Applause by the People, the Actors took Assurance to model them into a distinct Entertainment from the other Plays, and present them by themselves. And perhaps it was not 'till now, that they undertook to write several Pieces of Poetry with the Name of Mimi, representing an imperfect Sort of Drama, not divided into Acts, and performed only by a single Person. These were a very frequent Entertainment of the Roman Stage, long after Tragedy and Comedy had been advanced to their full Height, and seemed to have always maintained a very great Esteem in the Town.

The two famous Mimicks, or Pantomimi, as they called them, were Loberius and Publius, both cotemporary to Julius Cæsar. Loberius was a Person of the Equestrian Rank, and, at threescore Years of Age, acted the Mimick Pieces of his own composing, in the Games which Cæsar presented to the People; for which he received a Reward of five hundred Scstertia, and a gold Ring, and so recovered the Honour which he had forfeited by performing on the Stage (a). Macrobius has given us a Part of a Prologue of this Author, wherein he seems to complain of the Obligations which Cæsar laid on him to appear in the Quality of an Actor, so contrary to his own Inclination, and to the former Course of his Life. Some of them, which may serve for a Taste of his Wit and Style, are as follow:

*Fortuna immoderata in bono æque atque in malo,
Si tibi erat libitum literarum ludibus
Floris cacumen nostræ famæ frangere,
Cur, cum vigebam membris præviridantibus,
Satisfacere populo & tali cum poteram viro,
Non flexibilem me concurvasse ut carperes?
Nunc me quo dejicis? Quid ad scenam affero?
Decorem formæ, an dignitatem corporis?
Animi virtutem, an vocis jucundæ sonum?
Ut hedera serpens viris arboreas necat,
Ita me vetustas amplexu amorum enecat.
Sepulchri similis, nihil nisi nomen retineo.*

Horace indeed expressly taxes his Compositions with Want of Elegance (b); but Senliger (c) thinks the Censure to be very unjust; and that the Verses cited by Macrobius are much better than those of Horace, in which this Reflection is to be found.

There goes a sharp Repartee of the same Loberius upon Tully, when, upon receiving the golden Ring of Cæsar, he went to resume his Seat among the Knights; they out of a Principle of Honour seemed very unwilling to receive him; Cicero particularly told him, as he passed by, That indeed he would make Room for him with all his Heart, but that he was squeezed up already himself. No Wonder (says Loberius) that you, who commonly make Use of two Seats at once, fancy yourself squeezed up, when you sit like other People.

(a) See, in Jul. cap. 39. Macrobi. Saturn. lib. 2. cap. 7. (i) Lib. 1. Sat. 10. (c) De Re Pœt. lib. 1. cap. 10.

In which he gave a very severe Wipe on the Double-dealing of the Orator (a).

Publius was a Syrian by Birth, but received his Education at Rome in the Condition of a slave. Having by several Specimens of Wit obtained his Freedom, he set to write Mimick Pieces, and acted them with wonderful Applause, about the Towns in Italy. At last, being brought to Rome, to bear a Part in Cæsar's Plays, he challenged all the Dramatick Writers and Actors, and won the Prize from every Man of them, one by one, even from Laberius himself (b). A Collection of Sentences taken out of his Works is still extant. Joseph Scaliger gave them a very high Encomium, and thought it worth his while to turn them into Greek.

C H A P. VI.

Of the ROMAN Tragedy and Comedy.

THE Roman Tragedy and Comedy were wholly borrowed from the Græcians, and therefore do not so properly fall under the present Design: Yet, in order to a right Understanding of these Pieces, there is Scope enough for a very useful Enquiry, without roaming so far as Athens, unless upon a necessary Errand. The Parts of a Play agreed on by ancient and modern Writers, are these four: First, The Prologus, or Entrance, which gives a Light only to the Characters of the Persons, and proceeds very little to any Part of the Action. Secondly, The Epilogus, or Working up of the Plot, where the Play grows warmer; the Design or Action of it is drawing on, and you see something promising that will come to pass. Thirdly, The Catastasis, or, in a Roman Word, the Status, the Height and full Growth of the Play: This may properly be called the Counter-turn, which destroys that Expectation, embroils that Action in new Difficulties, and leaves us far distant from that Hope in which it found us. Lastly, the Catastrophe, or Abissus, the Discovery or unravelling of the Plot. Here we see all Things settled again on their first Foundation, and, the Obstacles which hindered the Design or Action of the Play at once removed, it ends with that Resemblance of Truth and Nature, Nature, that the Audience are satisfied with the Conduct of it (a). It is a Question whether the first Roman Drama's were divided into Acts; or at least it seems probable, that they were not admitted into Comedy, 'til after it had lost its Chorus, and so stood in Need of some more necessary Divisions than could be made by the Musick only. Yet the five Acts were so established in the Time of Horace, that he gives it for a Rule, Art. Poet. 189.

Neve minor, neu sit quinto productior actu Fabula.

The Distinction of the Scenes seems to have been an Invention of the Grammarians, and is not to be found in the old Copies of Plautus and Terence; and therefore these are wholly left out in the excellent French and English Translations.

The Drama's presented at Rome, were divided in general into Palliatae and Togatae, Græcian, and properly Roman. In the former, the Plot being laid in Greece, the Actors were habited according to the Fashion of that Country; in the other, the Persons were supposed to be Romans. But then the Comedies properly Roman were of several Sorts: Prætextatae, when the Actors were supposed to be Persons of Quality, such as the Liberty of wearing the Prætexta, or purple Gown: Tabernariæ, when the Tabernæ, low or ordinary Buildings, were expressed in the Scenes, the Persons being of the lower Rank. Suetonius (b) informs us, that C. Melissus, in the Time of Augustus, introduced a new Sort of Togatae, which he called Trabeatæ. Monsieur Dacier is of Opinion, that they were wholly taken up in Matters relating to the Camp, and that the Persons represented were some of the chief Officers (c): For the Trabea was the proper Habit of the Consul, when he set forward on any warlike Design. There was a Species of Comedy different from both these, and more inclining to Farce, which they called Atellana, from Atella, a Town of the Oscians in Campania, where it was first invented. The chief Design of it was Mirth and Jesting, (though sometime with a Mixture of Debauchery, and lascivious Postures) and therefore the Actors were not reckoned among the Florentissimi, or common Players, but kept the Benefit of their Tribe, and might be hired for Soldiers, a Privilege allowed only to Freemen. Sometimes perhaps the Atellane were presented between the Acts of other Comedies, by Way of Exodium, or Interlude: As we meet with Exodium Atellanicum in Suetonius (a).

Though all the Rules by which the Drama is practised at this Day, either such as relate to the Justness and Symmetry of the Plot, as the Epifodical Ornaments, such as Descriptions, Narrations, and other Beauties not essential to the Play, were delivered to us by the Ancients, and the Judgments which we make of all Performances of this Kind are guided by their Examples and Directions; yet there are several Things belonging to the old Dramatick Pieces which we cannot at all understand by the Modern, since, not being essential to these Works, they have been long disused. Of this Sort we may reckon up, as particularly worth our Observation, the Buskin and the Sock, the Masques, the Chorus, and the Flutes.

The Cothurnas and the Soccus were such eminent Marks of Distinction between the old Tragedy and Comedy, that they were brought not only to signify those distinct Species of Dramatick Poetry, but to express the sublime and the humble Style in any other Composition: As Martial calls Virgil Cothurnatus, though he never meddled with Tragedy:

Grande Cothurnati pone Maronis opus.

This Cothurnus is thought to have been a square high Sort of Boot, which made the Actors appear above the ordinary Size of Mortals, such as they supposed the old Heroes to have generally been; and at the same Time giving them Leave to move but slowly, were well accomodated to the State and Gravity which Subjects of that Nature required. Yet it is plain they were not in Use only on the Stage; for Virgil brings in the Goddess Venus in the Habit of a Tyrian Maid, telling Aeneas, i. 340.

Virginibus Tyriis nos est gestare pharetram, Purpureoque alte feras vincere coturno.

From which it appears, that the Hunters sometimes wore Buskins to secure their Legs: But then we must suppose them to be much lighter and better contrived than the other, for fear they should prove a Hindrance to the Swiftness and Agility required in that Sport. The Women in some Parts of Italy still wear a Sort of Shoes, or rather Stilts, somewhat like these Buskins, which they call Cioppini: Lassels informs us, that he had seen them at Venice a full half Yard high.

The Soccus was a slight Kind of Covering for the Feet, whence the Fashion and the Name of our Socks are derived. The Comedians wore these, to represent the Vility of the Person they represented, as debauched young Sparks, old crazy Misers, Pimps, Parasites, Strumpets, and the rest of that Gang; for the Sock being proper to the Women, as it was very light and thin, was always counted scandalous when worn by Men. Thus Seneca (a) exclaims against Caligula for sitting to judge upon Life and Death in a rich Pair of Socks, adorned with Gold and Silver.

Another Reason why they were taken up by the Actors of Comedy might be, because they were the fittest that could be imagined for Dancing. Thus Catullus invokes Hymen, the Patron of Weddings, lib. 9:

*Huc veni niveo gerens
Luteum pede soccum
Excitusque hilari die,
Nuptialia concinens
Voce carmina tinnula,
Pelle humum pedibus*——

The Persona or Mask, A. Gellius (b) derives (according to an old Author) from persono, to sound thoroughly; because these Vizards being put over the Face, and left open at the Mouth, rendered the Voice much clearer and fuller, by contracting it into a lesser Compass. But Scaliger will not allow of this Conjecture. However, the Reason of it (which is all that concerns us at present) appears from all the old Figures of the Masks, in which we find always a very large wide Hole designed for the Mouth. Madam Ducier, who met with the Draughts of the comic Vizards in a very old Manuscript of Terence, informs us, that they were not like ours, which cover only the Face, but that they came over the whole Head, and had always a Sort of Peruke of Hair fastened on them, proper to the Person whom they were to represent.

The Original of the Mask is referred by Horace to Æchylus, whereas before the Actors had no other Disguise, but

(a) B. reser. lib. 2. cap. 12.

(b) Nest. lib. 5. cap. 7.

to smear over their Faces with odd Colours; and yet this was well enough, when their Stage was no better than a Cart.

*Ignotum Tragicæ Genus invenisse Camenæ
Dicitur, & plaustri vexisse Poemata Theſpis:
Quæ canerent agerentque peruneli facibus ora.
Poſt hunc perſonæ pallæque repertor honeſtæ
Æſchylus, & modicis implevit pulpita tignis;
Et decuit magnamque loqui, nitique Cothurno.* Ars Poet. 275.

When Theſpis firſt expoſed the Tragic Muſe,
Rude were the Actors, and a Cart the Scene;
Where ghaffly Faces, ſtained with Lees of Wine,
Frighted the Children, and amus'd the Crowd.
This Æſchylus (with Indignation) ſaw,
And built a Stage, found out a decent Dreſs,
Brought Vizards in (a civiler Diſguiſe)
And taught Men how to ſpeak, and how to act.

[My Lord Roſcommon.]

The Cornu Hædelin defines to be a Company of Actors, repreſenting the Aſſembly or Body of thoſe Perſons, who either were preſent, or probably might be ſo, upon that Place or Scene where the Buſineſs was ſuppoſed to be tranſacted. This is exactly obſerved in the four Græcian Dramatick Poets, Æſchylus, ſophocles, Euripides, and Chriſtophanes; but the only Latin Tragedians which remain, thoſe under the Name of Seneca, as they are faulty in many Reſpects, ſo particularly are they in the Chorus; for ſometimes they hear all that is ſaid upon the Stage, ſee all that is done, and ſpeak very properly to all; at other Times one would think they were blind, deaf, or dumb. In many of theſe Dramas, one hardly can tell whom they repreſent, how they were diſſeſſed, what Reaſon brings them on the Stage, or why they are of one Sex more than of another. Indeed the Verses are fine, full of Thought, and over-loaded with Conceit, but may in noſt Places be very well ſpared, without ſpoiling any Thing either in the Senſe or the Reputation of the Poem. Beſides, the Thalia has no Chorus at all, which may give us Occaſion to doubt of what Scaliger affirms to poſſibly, that Tragedy was never without Chorus. For it ſeems probable enough, that in the Time of the debauched and looſe Emperors, when Minicks and Baſſoons came in for Interludes to Tragedy as well as Comedy, the Chorus ſealed by Degrees to to be a Part of the Dramatick Poem, and dwindled into a Troop of Musicians and Dancers, who marked the Intervals of the Acts.

The Office of the Chorus is thus excellently delivered by Horace: De Art. Poet. 193.

*Aëtoris partes Chorus officiumque virile
Defendat: neu quid medios intercinat actus,
Quod non proposito conducat & hæreat apte.
Ille bonis faveatque & concilietur amicis,
Et regat iratos, & amet peccare timentes;
Ille dapes laudet mensæ brevis; ille salubrem
Justitiam, legesque & apertis otia portis.
Ille tegat commissu; deosque precetur & oret,
Ut redeat miseris, abeat fortuna, superbis.*

A Chorus should supply what Action wants,
And has a generous and manly Part,
Bridles wild Rage, loves rigid Honesty,
And strict Observance of impartial Laws,
Sobriety, Security, and Peace,
And begs the Gods to turn bright Fortune's Wheel,
To raise the Wretched, and pull down the Proud;
But nothing must be sung between the Acts
But what some Way conduces to the Plot.

[My Lord Roscommon,

This Account is chiefly to be understood of the Chorus of Tragedies; yet the old Comedies, we are assured, had their Choruses too, as yet appears in Aristophanes; where, besides those composed of the ordinary Sort of Persons, we meet with one of Clouds, another of Frogs, and a third of Wasps, but all very conformable to the Nature of the Subject, and extremely comical.

It would be foreign to our present Purpose to trace the Original of the Chorus, and to shew how it was regulated by Thespis (generally honoured with the Title of the first Tragedian;) whereas before it was nothing else but a Company of Musicians singing and dancing in Honour of Bacchus. It may be more proper to observe how it came, after some Time, to be left out in Comedy, as it is in that of the Romans. Horace's Reason is, that the Malignity and satyrical Humours of the Poets was the Cause of it; for they made the Choruses abuse the People so severely, and with so bare a Face, that the Magistrates at last forbad them to use any at all: De Art. Poet. 283.

—————Chorusque
Turpiter obticuit, sublato jure nocendi.

But, perhaps, if the Rules of Probability had not likewise seconded this Prohibition, the Poets would have preserved their Chorus still, bating the satyrical Edge of it. Therefore a farther Reason may be offered for this Alteration. Comedy took its Model and Constitution from Tragedy; and, when the downright Abusing of living Persons was prohibited, they invented new Subjects which they governed by the Rules of Tragedy; but as they were necessitated to paint the Actions of the Vulgar, and consequently confined to mean Events, they generally chose the Place of their Scene in some Street, before the Houses of those whom they supposed concerned in the Plot: Now it was not very likely that there should be such a Company in those Places, managing an Intrigue of inconsiderable Persons from Morning till Night. Thus Comedy of itself let fall the Chorus, which it could not preserve with any Probability.

The Tibia, or Flutes, are as little understood as any particular Subject of Antiquity, and yet without the Knowledge of them we can make nothing of the Titles prefixed to Terence's Comedies. Horace gives us no further Light into this Matter, than by observing the Difference between the small rural Pipe, and the larger and louder Flute, afterwards brought into Fashion; however his Account is not to be passed by: Ars Poet. 202.

*Tibia non ut nunc orichalco vineta, tubæque
Fimula; sed tenuis simplexque foramine paucos,
Adspirare & adesse choris erat utilis, atque
Nardum spissu nimis complere sedilia flatu:
Quo sane populus numerabilis, utpote parvus,
Isti frangi castusque verecundæque coibat.
Postquam cæpit agros extendere victor, & urbem
Lattor amplecti murus, vinoque diurno
Placari Genius festis impune diebus;
Accessit nomenisque modisque licentia major.
Indoctus quid enim sciret, liberque laborum
Ruglicus no bano conjugis, turpis hunclo?*

*Sic priscæ motumque & luxuriam addidit arti
Tibicen, traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem.*

First the shrill Sound of a small rural Pipe
(Not loud like Trumpets, nor adorn'd as now)
Was Entertainment for the infant Stage,
And pleas'd the thin and bashful Audience
Of our well-meaning frugal Ancestors.
But, when our Walls and Limits were enlarg'd
And Men (grown wanton by Prosperity)
Studied new Arts of Luxury and Ease,
The Verse, the Musick, and the Scenes improv'd;
For how should Ignorance be Judge of Wit?
Or Men of Sense applaud the Jest of Fools?
Then came rich Clothes and graceful Action in,
And Instruments were taught more moving Notes.
[My Lord Roscommon.]

This Relation, though very excellent, cannot solve the main Difficulty; and that is, to give the proper Distinction of the Flutes, according to the several Names under which we find them, as the Pares and Impares, the Dextræ and Sinistræ, the Lydiæ, the Sarranæ, and the Phrygiæ. Most of the eminent Criticks have made some Essays towards the clearing of this Subject, particularly Scaliger, Aldus Manutius, Salmasius, and Tanaquillus Faber: From whose Collections, and her own admirable Judgment, Madam Dacier has lately given us a very rational Account of the Matter. The Performers of the Musick (says she) played always on two Flutes the whole Time of the Comedy; that which they stopped with their Right Hand, was on that Account called Right-handed; and that which they stopped with their Left, Left-handed: The first had but a few Holes, and sounded a deep Base; the other had a great Number of Holes, and gave a shriller and sharper Note. When the Musicians played on two Flutes of a different Sound, they used to say the Piece was played Tibiis imparibus, with unequal Flutes, or Tibiis dextris & sinistris, with Right and Left-handed Flutes. When they played on two Flutes of the same Sound, they used to say the Musick was performed Tibiis paribus dextris, on equal Right-handed Flutes, if they were of the deeper Sort; or else Tibiis paribus sinistris, on equal Left-handed Flutes, if they were those of a shriller Note.

Two equal Right-handed Flutes they called Lydian, two equal Left-handed ones Sarranae, or Tyrian; two unequal Flutes Phrygian, as Imitations of the Musick of those Countries. The last Sort Virgil expressly attributes to the Phrygians, Æneid. 9. 618:

*O vere Phrygiæ, neque enim Phryges! ite per alta
Dindyma, ubi offuetis biforem dat Tibia cantum.*

Where, by biforem cantum, the Commentators understand an equal Sound, such as was made by two different Pipes, one flat, and the other sharp.

The Title of Terence's Andria cannot be made out according to this Explanation, unless we suppose (as there is very good Reason) that the Musick sometimes changed in the acting of a Play, and at the proper Intervals two Right-handed and two Left-handed Flutes might be used.

Our late ingenious Translators of Terence are of a different Opinion from the French Lady, when they render Tibiis paribus dextris & sinistris; two equal Flutes, the one Right-handed, and the other Left-handed; whereas Musick should seem rather to have been performed all along on two equal Flutes, sometimes on two Right-handed, and sometimes on two Left-handed.

Old Donatus would have us believe that the Right-handed or Lydian Flutes denoted the more serious Matter and Language of the Comedy; that the Left-handed, or Sarranae, were proper to express the Lightness of a more jocose Style; and that, when a Right-handed Flute was joined with a Left-handed, it gave us to understand the Mixture of Gravity and Mirth in the same Play. But since the Title of Hecautontimoroumenos, or Self-tormentor, informs us, that the Musick was performed the first Time of acting on unequal Flutes, and the second Time on Right-handed Flutes, we cannot agree with the old Scholiast, without supposing the same Play at one Time to be partly serious and partly merry, and at another Time to be wholly of the graver Sort, which would be ridiculous to imagine; therefore the ingenious Lady happily advanceth a very fair Opinion, that the Musick was not guided by the Subject of the Play, but by the Occasion on which it was presented. Thus in the Pieces that were acted at Funeral Solemnities, the Musick was performed on two Right handed Flutes, as the most grave and melancholy. In those acted on any joyful Account, the Musick

Musick consisted of two Left-handed Flutes, as the briskest and most airy. But in the great Festivals of the Gods, which participated of an equal Share of Mirth and Religion, the Musick in the Comedies was performed with unequal Flutes, the one Right-handed, and the other Left-handed; or el'e by Turns, sometimes on two Right-handed Flutes, and sometimes on two Left-handed, as may be judged of Terence's Andria.

If any Thing farther deserves our Notice in Relation to the Roman Drama's, it is the remarkable Difference between their Actors and those of Greece; for at Athens the Actors were generally Persons of good Birth and Education, for the most Part Orators or Poets of the first Rank. Sometimes we find Kings themselves performing on the Theatres; and Cornelius Nepos assures us, that to appear on the publick Stage was not in the least injurious to any Man's Character or Honour (a).

But in Rome we meet with a quite contrary Practice; for the Histriones (so called from Hister, signifying a Player in the Language of the Tuscan's, from whom they were first brought to Rome to appease the Gods in Time of a Plague) were the most scandalous Company imaginable, none of that Profession being allowed the Privilege to belong to any Tribe, or ranked any higher than the Slaves; however, if any of them happened at the same Time to be excellent Artists, and Men of good Morals, they seldom failed of the Esteem and Respect of the chiefest Persons in the Commonwealth. This is evident from the Account we have in History of the admirable Roscius, of whom Tully, his familiar Friend, has left this lasting Commendation: Cum artifex ejusmodi sit, ut solus dignus videatur esse, qui in Scena spectetur; tum vir ejusmodi est, ut solus dignus videatur qui eo non accedat (b). So complete an Artist, that he seemed the only Person who deserved to tread the Stage; and yet at the same Time so excellent a Man in all other Respects, that he seemed the only Person who of all Men should not take up that Profession.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Sacred, Votive, and Funeral Games.

THE sacred Games, being instituted on several Occasions to the Honour of several Deities, are divided into many Species, all of which very frequently occur in Authors, and may be thus in short described.

The LUDI MEGALENSIS were instituted to the Honour of the great Goddess, or the Mother of the Gods, when her Statue was brought with so much Pomp from Pessinum to Rome; they consisted only of scenical Sports, and were a solemn Time of Invitation to Entertainments among Friends. In the solemn Procession the Women danced before the Image of the Goddess, and the Magistrates appeared in all their Robes, whence came the Phrase of Purpura Megalensis: They lasted six Days, from the Day before the Nones of April, to the Ides. At first they seem to have been called the Megalensia, from μέγας great, and afterwards to have lost the n; since we find them more frequently under the Name of Megalesia. It is particularly remarkable in these Games, that no Servant was allowed to bear a Part in the Celebration.

The LUDI CEREALES were designed to the Honour of Ceres, and borrowed from Eleusine, in Greece. In these Games the Matrons represented the Grief of Ceres, after she had lost her Daughter Proserpine, and her Travels to find her again. They were held from the Day before the Ides of April, eight Days together in the Circus, where, besides the Combats of Horsemen, and other Diversions, was led up the Pompa Circensis, or Cerealis, consisting of a solemn Procession of the Persons that were to engage in the Exercises, accompanied with the Magistrates and Ladies of Quality, the Statues of the Gods, and of famous Men, being carried along in State on Waggon, which they called Thensa.

LUDI FLORALES, sacred to Flora, and celebrated (upon Advice of the Sybilline Oracles) every Spring to beg a Blessing on the Grats, Trees, and Flowers. Most have been of Opinion that they owed their Original to a famous Whore, who, having gained a great Estate by her Trade, left the Commonwealth

Commonwealth her Heir, with this Condition, that every Year they should celebrate her Birth-day with publick Sports; the Magistrates, to avoid such a publick Scandal, and at the same Time to keep their Promise, held the Games on the Day appointed, but pretended that it was done in the Honour of a new Goddess, the Patroness of Flowers. Whether this Conjecture be true or not, we are certain that the main Part of the Solemnity was managed by a Company of lewd Strumpets, who ran up and down naked, sometimes dancing, sometimes fighting, or acting the Mimick. However it came to pass, the wisest and gravest Romans were not for discontinuing this Custom, though the most indecent imaginable: For Portius Cato, when he was present at these Games, and saw the People ashamed to let the Women strip while he was there, immediately went out of the Theatre, to let the Ceremony have its Course (a). Learned Men are now agreed, that the vulgar Notion of Flora, the Strumpet, is purely a Fiction of Laëtantius, from whom it was taken. Flora appears to have been a Sabine Goddess; and the Ludi Florales to have been instituted A. U. C. 613. with the Fines of many Persons then convicted of the Crimen Peculatus, for appropriating to themselves the publick Land of the State (b).

LUDI MARTIALES, instituted to the Honour of Mars, and held twice in the Year, on the 4th of the Ides of May, and again on the Kalends of August, the Day on which his Temple was consecrated. They had no particular Ceremonies that we can meet with, besides the ordinary Sports in the Circus and Amphitheatre.

LUDI APOLLINARES, celebrated to the Honour of Apollo. They owe their Original to an old propheticall Sort of a Poem casually found, in which the Romans were advised, that, if they desired to drive out the Troops of their Enemies which infested their Borders, they should institute yearly Games to Apollo, and at the Time of their Celebration make a Collection, out of the publick and private Stocks, for a Present to the God, appointing ten Men to take Care they were held with the same Ceremonies as in Greece (c). Macrobius relates, that, the first Time these Games were kept, an Alarm being given by the Enemy, the People immediately marched out against them, and, during the Fight, saw a Cloud of Arrows discharged from the Sky on the adverse Troops, so as to put them to a very disorderly Flight, and secure the Victory to the Romans (a). The People sat to see the Circensian Plays, all crowned with Laurel, the Gates were set open, and the Day kept sacred with all Manner of Ceremonies. These Games at first were not fixed, but kept every Year upon what Day the Prætor thought fit, 'till about the Year of the City 545, a Law passed to settle them for ever on a constant Day, which was near the Nones of July: This Alteration was occasioned by a grievous Plague then raging in Rome, which they thought might, in some Measure, be allayed by that Act of Religion (b).

(a) Valer. Maxim. lib. 2. cap. 10. (b) Grev. Prefat. ad 1 Tom. Thesaur. A. R.
(c) Liv. lib. xxv.

LUDI CAPITOLINI, instituted to the Honour of Jupiter Capitolinus, upon the Account of preserving his Temple from the Gauls. A more famous Sort of Capitoline Games were brought up by Domitian, to be held every five Years, with the Name of Agones Capitolini, in Imitation of the Græcians. In these the Professors of all Sorts had a publick Contention, and the Victors were crowned and presented with Collars and other Marks of Honour.

LUDI ROMANI, the most ancient Games instituted at the first Building of the Circus by Tarquinius Priscus. Hence, in a strict Sense, Ludi Circenses are often used to signify the same Solemnity. They were designed to the Honour of the three great Deities, Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva. It is worth observing, that though they were usually called Circenses, yet in Livy we meet with the Ludi Romani Scenici (c), intimating that they were celebrated with new Sports. The old Fassi make them to be kept nine Days together, from the Day before the Nones, to the Day before the Ides of September: In which too we find another Sort of Ludi Romani, celebrated five Days together, within two Days after these. P. Manutius thinks the first to have been instituted very late, not 'till after the Prosecution of Verres by Cicero (d).

LUDI CONSUALES, instituted by Romulus, with Design to surprize the Sabine Virgins; the Account of which is thus given us by Plutarch: "He gave out as if he had found " an Altar of a certain God hid under Ground; the God they " called Consus, the God of Council: This is properly Neptune,
" the Inventor of Horse-riding; for the Altar is kept covered " in the great Circus; only at Horse-races, then it appears to " publick View; and some say, it was not without Reason,

(a) Saturn, lib. 1. cap. 17. (b) Livy, lib. 25. (c) Livy, 3. (d) Manutius in Verres,
" that

“ that this God had his Altar hid under Ground, because all “ Counsels ought to be secret and concealed. Upon Discovery
 “ of this Altar, Romulus, by Proclamation, appointed a Day
 “ for a splendid Sacrifice, and for publick Games and Shows
 “ to entertain all Sorts of People, and many flocked thither ;
 “ he himself sat uppermost among his Nobles, clad in Purple.
 “ Now the Sign of their falling on was to be, whenever he “ arose and gathered up his Robe, and threw it over his Body ;
 “ his Men stood all ready armed, with their Eyes intent upon “ him ; and when the Sign was given, drawing their Swords,
 “ and falling on with a great Shout, bore away the Daughters “ of the Sabines, they themselves flying, without any Let or “ Hindrance.” These Games were celebrated yearly on the twelfth of the Kalends of September, consisting for the most Part of Horse-Races, and Encounters in the Circus.

LUDI COMPITALITII, so called from the Com-pita, or Cross-Lanes, where they were instituted and celebrated by the rude Multitude that was got together, before the Building of Rome. They seem to have been laid down for many Years, till Servius Tullius revived them. They were held during the Compitalia, or Feast of the Lares, who presided as well over Streets as Houses. Suetonius tells us, that Augustus ordered the Lares to be crowned twice a Year at the Compitalian Games, with Spring Flowers (a). This crowning the Household Gods, and offering Sacrifices up and down the Streets, made the greatest Part of the Solemnity of the Feast.

LUDI AUGUSTALES and PALATINI, both instituted to the Honour of Augustus, after he had been enrolled in the Number of the Gods ; the former by the common Consent of the People, and the other by his Wife Livia, which were always celebrated in the Palace (b). They were both continued by the succeeding Emperors.

LUDI SÆCULARES, the most remarkable Games that we meet with in the Roman Story. The common Opinion makes them to have had a very odd Original, of which we have a tedious Relation in Valerius Maximus (c), of the Ancients, and Angelus Palitanius (d) of the Moderns. Monsieur Dacier, in his excellent Remarks on the Secular Poem of Horace, passes by this old Conceit as trivial and fabulous, and (a) Aug. cap. 32. (b) Eio. lib. 56. Sueton. Calig. 56. (c) Lib. 2. cap. 4.

 (d) Mysiclus. cap. 58.

assures us, that we need go no farther for the Rise of the Custom, than to the Sibylline Oracles, for which the Romans had so great an Esteem and Veneration.

In these sacred Writings, there was one famous Prophecy to this Effect; That if the Romans, at the Beginning of every Age, should hold solemn Games in the Campus Martius to the Honour of Pluto, Proserpine, Juno, Apollo, Diana, Ceres, and the Parcæ, or three fatal Sisters, their City should ever flourish, and all Nations be subjected to their Dominion. They were very ready to obey the Oracle, and, in all the Ceremonies used on that Occasion, conformed themselves to its Directions. The whole Manner of the Solemnity was as follows: In the first Place, the Heralds received Orders to make an Invitation of the whole World to come to a Feast which they had never seen already, and should never see again. Some few Days before the Beginning of the Games, the Quinddecimviri, taking their Seats in the Capitol, and in the Palatine Temple, distributed among the People purifying Compositions, as Flambeaus, Brimstone, and Sulphur. From hence the People passed on to Diana's Temple, on the Aventine Mountain, carrying Wheat, Barley, and Beans, as an Offering; and after this they spent whole Nights in Devotion to the Destinies. At length, when the Time of the Games was actually come, which continued three Days and three Nights, the People assembled in the Campus Martius, and sacrificed to Jupiter, Juno, Apollo, Latona, Diana, the Parcæ, Ceres, Pluto, and Proserpine. On the first Night of the Feast, the Emperor, accompanied by the Quinddecimviri, commanded three Altars to be raised on the Bank of the Tiber, which they sprinkled with the Blood of three Lambs, and then proceeded to burn the Offerings and the Victims. After which they marked out a Space which served for a Theatre, being illuminated by an innumerable Multitude of Flambeaus and Fires: Here they sung some certain Hymns composed on this Occasion, and celebrated all Kinds of Sports. On the Day after, when they had been at the Capitol to offer the Victims, they returned to the Campus Martius, and held Sports to the Honour of Apollo and Diana. These lasted 'till the next Day, when the noble Matrons, at the Hour appointed by the Oracle, went to the Capitol to sing Hymns to Jupiter. On the third Day, which concluded the Feast, twenty-seven young Boys, and as many Girls, sung in the Temple of Palatine Apollo, Hymns and Verses in Greek and Latin, to recommend recommend the City to the Protection of those Deities whom they designed particularly to honour by these Sacrifices.

The famous Secular Poem of Horace was composed for this last Day, in the Secular Game held by Augustus. Dacier has given his Judgment on this Poem, as the Master-piece of Horace; and believes that all Antiquity cannot furnish us with any Thing more happily complete.

There has been much Controversy, whether these Games were celebrated every hundred, or every hundred and ten Years. For the former Opinion Censorinus (a) alledges the Testimony of Valerius, Antias, Varro, and Livy; and this was certainly the Space of Time which the Romans called Sæculum, or an Age. For the latter he produceth the Authority of the Registers, or Commentaries of the Quindecimviri, and the Edicts of Augustus, besides the plain Evidence of Horace in his Secular Poem; 21.

Certus undenos decies per annos, &c.

This last Space is expressly enjoined by the Sibylline Oracle itself; the Verses of which, relating to this Purpose, are transcribed by Zosimus in the second Book of his History:

Ἄλλ' ὅμα ἂν μέγιστος ἔκη χρόνος ἀνθρώποισι
Ζωῆς, εἰς ἑτάων καλὸν δεκά κύκλον οὐδένων, &c.

Yet according to the ancient Accounts we have of their Celebration in the several Ages, neither of these Periods are much regarded.

The first were held, A. U. C. 245, or 298.

The second A. 330. or 408.

The third A. 518.

The fourth either A. 605, or 608, or 628.

The fifth by Augustus, A. 736.

The sixth by Claudius, A. 800.

The seventh by Domitian, A. 841.

The eighth by Severus, A. 957.

The ninth by Philip, A. 1000.

The tenth by Honorius, A. 1157.

The Disorder, without Question, was owing to the Ambition of the Emperors, who were extremely desirous to have the Honour of celebrating these Games in their Reign; and therefore, upon the slightest Pretence, many Times made them return before their ordinary Course. Thus Claudius pretended that Augustus had held the Games before their due Time, that he might have the least Excuse to keep them within sixty-four Years afterwards. On which Account, Suetonius tells us, that the People scoffed his Cryers, when they went about proclaiming Games that no Body had ever seen, nor would see again; whereas there were not only many Persons alive who remembered the Games of Augustus, but several Players who had acted in those Games were now again brought on the Stage by Claudius (a).

(a) De Die Natali, cap. 17.

What Part of the Year the Secular Games were celebrated in, is uncertain; probably in the Times of the Commonwealth, on the Days of the Nativity of the City, i. e. the 9, 10, 11 Cal. Maii. but under the Emperors, on the Day when they came to their Power (b).

We may conclude our Enquiry into this celebrated Subject, with two excellent Remarks of the French Critick. The first is, that in the Number Three, so much regarded in these Games, they had probably an Allusion to the Triplicity of Phæbus, of Diana, and of the Destinies.

The other observation, which he obliges us with, is, that they thought the Girls, which had the Honour to bear a Part in singing the Secular Poem, should be the soonest married. This Superstition they borrowed from the Theology of the Græcians, who imagined that the Children, who did not sing and dance at the coming of Apollo, should never be married, and should certainly die young. To this Purpose Callimachus, in his Hymn to Apollo:

Μῆτε τιωπήνεν κίδαριν, μήτ' ἄλκιον ἔχοντες
Τῆ Φοῖβος τῆ; παῖδας ἔχειν ἐπιδουλοῦντας,
Εἰ τελέειν μέλλουσιν γάμον τελευτῶν τε κερταίῳ.

And Horace, encouraging the Chorus of Girls to do their best in Singing the Secular Poem, tells them how proud they would be of it, when they well married:

*Nupta jam dicet: Ego dies amicum,
Sæculo festas reverente lucas
Reddidi carmen, docilis modorum.*

Vatis Horati, Lib. iv. Od. 6.

All those Games, of what Sort soever, had the common Name of Votivi, which were the Effect of any Vow made by the Magistrates or Generals, when they set forward on any Expedition, to be performed in case they returned successful. These were sometimes occasioned by Advice of the Sibylline Oracles, or of the Soothsayers; and many Times proceeded purely from a Principle of Devotion and Piety in the Generals. Such particularly were the Ludi Magni, often mentioned in Historians, especially by Livy. Thus he informs us, that in the Year of the City 536, Fabius Maximus the Dictator, to appease the Anger of the Gods, and to obtain Success against the Carthaginian Power, upon the Direction of the Sibylline Oracles, vowed the Great Games to Jupiter, with a prodigious Sum to be expended at them, besides three hundred Oxen to be sacrificed to Jupiter, and several others to the rest of the Deities (a). M. Acilius the Consul did the same in the War against Antiochus (b). And we have some Examples of these Games being made Quinquennial, or to return every five Years (c). They were celebrated with Circensian Sports four Days together (d).

To this Head we may refer the Ludi Victoriæ mentioned by Vell. Paterculus (e), and Asconius (f): They were instituted by Sylla, upon his concluding the Civil War. It seems probable, that there were many other Games with the same Title, celebrated on Account of some remarkable Success by several of the Emperors.

The Ludi Quinquennales, instituted by Augustus Cæsar after his Victory against Antony; which resolving to deliver famous to succeeding Ages, he built the City Nicopolis, near Actium, the Place of Battle, on Purpose to hold these Games; whence they are often called Ludi Actiaci. They consisted of Shows of Gladiators, Wrestlers, and other Exercises, and were kept as well at Rome as at Nicopolis. The proper Curators of them were the four Colleges of Priests, the Pontifices, the Augurs, the Septemviri, and the Quindecimviri.

Virgil, in Allusion to this Custom, when he brings his Hero to the Promontory of Actium, makes him hold solemn Games, with the Lustrations and Sacrifices used on that Occasion by the Romans:

*Lustramusque Jovi, votisque incendimus aras;

Æn. 3. 279.

(a) Liv. lib. 22. (b) Ibid. lib. 36. (c) L. J. lib. 27 & 30. (d) Ibid.
(e) Tac. cap. 25. (f) J. P. n. s. 2.

Nero, after the Manner of the Græcians, instituted Quinquennial Games, at which the most celebrated Masters of Musick, Horse-racing, Wrestling, &c. disputed for the Prize (a).

The same Exercises were performed in the Quinquennial Games of Domitian, dedicated to Jupiter Capitolinus, together with the Contentions of Orators and Poets (b), at which the famous Statius had once the ill Fortune to lose the Prize; as he complains several Times in his miscellany Poems.

Ludi Decennales, or Games to return every tenth Year, were instituted by Augustus, with this political Design, to secure the whole Command to himself, without incurring the Envy or Jealousy of the People. For every tenth Year proclaiming solemn Sports, and so gathering together a numerous Company of Spectators, he there made Proffer of resigning his Imperial Office to the People, though he immediately resumed it, as if continued to him by the common Consent of the Nation (c). Hence a Custom was derived for the succeeding Emperors, every tenth Year of their Reign, to keep a magnificent Feast, with the Celebration of all Sorts of publick Sports and Exercises (d).

The Ludi Triumphales were such Games as made a Part of the triumphal Solemnity.

Ludi Natalitii, instituted by every particular Emperor to commemorate his own Birth-day.

Ludi Juvenales, instituted by Nero at the Shaving of his Beard, and at first privately celebrated in his Palace or Gardens; but they soon became publick, and were kept in great State and Magnificence. Hence the Games held by the following Emperors in the Palace, yearly on the first of January, took the Name of Juvenalia (e).

Cicero speaks of the Ludi Juventutis, instituted by Salinator in the Senenian War, for the Health and Safety of the Youth, a Plague then reigning in the City (f).

The Ludi Miscelli, which Suetonius makes Caligula to have instituted at Lyons in France, seem to have been a Miscellany of Sports, consisting of several Exercises joined together on a new and unusual Manner (g).

The LUDI FUNEBRES, assigned for one Species of the Roman publick Games, as to the Original and Manner, have been already described in the Chapter of the Gladiators. It may be proper to observe farther, that Tertullian in his particular Treatise De Spectaculis, as he derives the Custom of the Gladiatorian Combats from the Funeral Rites; so he takes Notice, that the Word Munus, applied originally to these Shows, is no more than Officium, a kind Office to the Dead. We must remember, that though the Shows of Gladiators, which took their Rise from hence, were afterwards exhibited on many other Occasions, yet the primitive Custom of presenting them, at the Funerals of great Men, all along prevailed in the City and Roman Provinces; nor was it confined only to Persons of Quality, but almost every rich Man was honoured with this Solemnity after his Death; and this they very commonly provided for in their Wills, defining the Number of Gladiators who should be hired to engage; insomuch that when any wealthy Person deceased, the People used to claim a Show of Gladiators, as their Due by long Custom. Suetonius to this Purpose tells us of a Funeral, in which the common People extorted Money by Force from the deceased Person's Heirs, to be expended on this Account (a).

(a) Sueton. Ner. 12. (b) Mem. Domit. 4. (c) Dio, lib. 36. (d) Ibid.

Julius Cæsar brought up a new Custom of allowing this Honour to the Women, when he obliged the People with a Feast and a publick Show in Memory of his Daughter (b).

It is very memorable, that though the Exhibitors of these Shows were private Persons, yet, during the Time of the Celebration, they were considered as of the highest Rank and Quality, having the Honour to wear the Prætecta, and to be waited on by the Lictors and Beadles, who were necessary to keep the People in Order, and to assist the Designatores, or Marshalls of the Procession (c).

C H A P. VIII.

Of the ROMAN Habit.

THE Roman Habit has given as much Trouble to the Critics, as any other Part of Antiquity; and though the most learned Men have been so kind as to leave us their Thoughts on this Subject, yet the Matter is not fully explained, and the Controversies about it admit of no Decision. However, without enquiring into the several Fashions of the Romans, or defining the exact Time when they first changed their Leathern Jerkins, or primitive Hides of wild Beasts, for the more decent and graceful Attires, it will be sufficient to the present Design to observe the several Sorts of Garments in Use with both Sexes, and to give the best Distinction of them that can be found out at this Distance.

The two common and celebrated Garments of the Romans were the Toga and the Tunica.

The Toga, or Gown, seems to have been of a semi-circular Form, without Sleeves, different in Largeness, according to the Wealth or Poverty of the Wearer, and used only upon Occasion of appearing in Publick; whence it is often called Vestis grexsis (a).

The Colour of the Gown is generally believed to have been white. The common Objections against this Opinion are, how it could then be distinguished from the Toga candida, used by Competitors for Offices? Or how it comes to pass that we read particularly of their wearing white Gowns on Holidays and public Festivals, as in Horace:

*Ille repotia, natales, aliosque dierum
Festos albatu celebrat* (b).——

if their ordinary Gown were of the same Colour: But both these Scruples are easily solved; for between the Toga alba and candida, we may apprehend this Difference, that the former was the natural Colour of the Wool, and the other an artificial White, which appeared with a greater Advantage of Lustre; and therefore Polybius chuseth rather to call the Candidate's Gown λαμπρὰ, than λευκὴ, not of a bare white, but of a bright shining Colour; for this Purpose they made use of a fine Kind of Chalk, whence Perfius took the Hint of Cretata Ambitio (a). As to the Holidays, or solemn Festivals, on which we find the Romans always attired in White, it is reasonable to believe, that all Persons of any Fashion constantly put on new Gowns, which were of the purest White, on these Occasions, and those of meaner Condition might perhaps chalk over their old Gowns, which were now grown rusty, and had almost lost their Colour (b).

The Dispute between Manutius and Sigonius, whether the Roman Gown was tied about with a Girdle or not, is commonly decided in Favour of Manutius; yet it must be acknowledged, that the best Authors allow some Kind of Cincture to the Gown; but then it must be understood to be performed only by the Help of the Gown itself, or by that Part of it, which, coming under the Right Arm, was drawn over to the Left Shoulder, and so covering the Umbo, or Knot of Plaits which rested there, kept the Gown close together. This Lappet Quintilian calls the Belt, in his Advice to the Orators about this Matter: Ille qui sub humero dextro ad sinistram oblique ducitur, velut balteus, nec strangulet, nec fluat (c).

The Belt being loosed, and the Left Arm drawn in, the Gown flowed out, and the Sinus, or main Lappet, hung about the Wearer's Feet; this was particularly observed in Cæsar, who commonly let his Gown hang dragging after him; whence Sylla used to advise the Noblemen, ut puerum male præcinctum caverent (d).

The accurate Ferrarius is certainly in a Mistake as to the Point, for maintaining that the Gown had no Kind of Cinctus but what they called Gabinus; he will have this meant only of the Tunica, but the plain Words of Macrobius make such a Supposition impossible, and Laciniam trahere expressly points out the Gown; for the Tunic, being only a short Vest, cannot by any Means be conceived to have a Lappet dragging on the Ground (e).

The same Fault which Sylla objected to Cæsar, was commonly observed in Mæcenas, and is a Mark of that effeminate

(a) Sat. 5. ver. 177. (b) Lipf. El. lib. 1. cap. 13. (c) Iustur. lib. 11. cap. 3. (d) Sueton. Jul. cap. 45. Macrobi. Saturnal. lib. 2. cap. 3. (e) Cæsar. vius ad Sueton. Jul. 45.

Softness, which makes an unhappy Part of his Character in History.

The learned Grævius observes, that the Word Præcingi was proper to the Gown, because the Lappet did not close about the whole Gown, but only the Fore-part of it (a).

The Cinctus Gabinus is most happily described by Ferrarius: Cinctus Gabinus non aliud fuit, quam cum togæ lacinia lævo brachio subacta in tergum ita rejiciebatur, ut contracta retraheretur ad pectus, atque ita in nodum neceretur; qui nodus sive cinctus togam contraheret, brevior. inque & firmitiorem reddidit (b). The Cinctus Gabinus was nothing else, but when the Lappet of the Gown, which used to be brought up to the Left Shoulder, being drawn thence, was cast off in such a Manner upon the Back, as to come short round to the Breast, and there fasten in a Knot, which Knot or Cincture tucked up the Gown, and made it shorter and straiter. This Cinctus was properly only to the Consuls or Generals upon some extraordinary Occasions, as the denouncing War, burning the Spoils of the Enemy, devoting themselves to Death for the Safety of their Army, and the like; it was borrowed from the Inhabitants of Gabii, a City of Campania, who at the Time of a publick Sacrifice, happening to be set upon suddenly by their Enemies, were obliged through Haste to gather up their Gowns in this Manner, and so march out to oppose them (c).

In the ordinary Wear, the upper Part of the Gown used to lie over the Right Shoulder, yet upon Occasion it was an easy Matter to draw back that Part again, and make it cover the Head; and learned Men are of Opinion, that the Romans, while they continued in the City, made Use of this Sort of Covering only for the Head, never appearing in any Kind of Caps or Hats, unless they were on a Journey out of Town. Thus Plutarch informs us of the Deference paid to the great Men as they passed the Streets; Ο Ρωμαῖοι τῶν ἀνδράστων τοῖς ἀξίοις τιμῆς ἀπαλλάττες, κἢ τυγχῶσιν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς τὸ ἱμάτιον ἔχοντες, ἀπεκαλύπτουσιν. The Romans when they meet any Person who deserves a particular Respect, if they chance to have their Gown on their Head, presently uncover. And the same Author, reckoning up the Marks of Honour which Sylla shewed Pompey, adds, καὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς ἀνελκύσας τὸ ἱμάτιον, and pulling off his Gown from his Head.

The several Sorts of the Roman Gowns were the Toga, Prætexta, the Palla, the Sordida, and the Picta, Purpurea, Palmata, &c. or the Trabea.

(a) Ibid. (b) De Re Vestiar. lib. 1. cap. 14. (c) Servius ad Virgil. Æn. 7. v. 612.

Every one knows that the Gown was the distinguishing Mark of the Romans from the Greeks, who wore the Pallium or Cloak, as their common Garment, whence Togatus and Palliatius are often used for Roman and Græcian; as also that the Gown was the proper Badge of Peace, being generally laid aside upon engaging in any martial Design; yet it appears from many Passages of Livy and Plutarch, that it was sometimes worn in the Camp; if so, perhaps the Equites and Centurions had this peculiar Privilege, and that only when they lay in the Camp without any Thoughts of sudden Action, as Manutius learnedly conjectures (a).

The Toga Prætexta had a Border of Purple round the Edges, whence it took its Name, and in Allusion to which, the Græcian Writers call it περιπόρφυρον. It seems originally to have been appropriated to the Magistrates and some of the Priests, when at first introduced by Tullus Hostilius. How it came to be bestowed on the young Men is differently related. Some fancy that Tarquinius Priscus, in a Triumph for a Victory against the Sabines, first honoured his own Son with the Prætexta and the Bulla aurea, as Rewards for his Valour, for killing one of his Enemies with his own Hands; for as the former was the Robe of the Magistrates, so the Bulla aurea was 'till then only used by Generals in their triumphal Procession, being a Sort of hollow golden Ball hanging about their Necks, in which was inclosed some secret Amulet or Preservative against Envy. Others, without regarding this first Story, tell us, that the same Tarquinius, among other wise Constitutions, took particular Care in assigning the proper Habit to the Boys, and accordingly ordained, that the Sons of Noblemen should make Use of the Prætexta and the Bulla aurea, provided their Father had borne any curule Office, and that the rest should wear the Prætexta only, as low as the Sons of those who had served on Foot back in the Army the full Time that the Law required. A third Party refer the Original of this Custom to Romulus himself, as the Consequence of a Promise made to the Sabine Virgins, that he would bestow a very considerable Mark of Honour on the first Child that was born to any of them by a Roman Father. Many believe that the Reason of giving them the Bulla and the Prætexta was, that the former, being shaped like a Heart, might, as oft as they looked on it, be no inconsiderable Incitement to Courage; and that the Purple of the Gown might remind them of the Modesty which became them at that Age (a).

(a) De Rebus per Ital. lib. 1, Ep. 1.

But on what Account soever this Institution took its Rise, it was constantly observed by all the Sons of the Ingenui or Free-born. The Libertini too in some Time obtained the same Privilege, only instead of the golden Bulla, they wore a leathern one, as Juvenal intimates, Sat. 5. 164:

— *Etruscum puero si contigit aurum,
Vel nodus tantum & signum de paupere loro.*

It is commonly believed that the Boys changed this Gown at the Age of 14 Years for the Toga Virilis: but Monsieur Dacier makes this a great Mistake; for 'till they were 13 Years old, he says, they wore a Sort of Vest with Sleeves, which they called Alicata Oblanys, and then left off that to put on the Prætexta, which they did not change 'till they had reached the Age of Puberty, or the 17th Year (b).

It is a very pertinent Remark, that this Prætexta was not only a Token of the Youth and Quality of the Wearer, but besides this they had the Repute of a sacred Habit; and therefore, when they assigned it for the Use of the Boys, they had this especial Consideration, that it might be a Kind of Guard or Defence to them against the Injuries to which that Age was exposed (c). Thus the poor Boy in Horace cries out to the Witch Canidia that was tormenting him, Per hoc iuane purpure decus precor. Epod. 5.

And Perfius calls it costis purpura in his fifth Satyr. But Quintilian most expressly, Ego vobis allego etiam illud sacrum prætextarum, quo sacerdotes velantur, quo Magistratus, quo infirmitatem pueritiæ sacrum facinus ac venerabilem (d). “I acknowledge too the sacred Habit of the Prætexta, the Robe of Priests and Magistrates, and that by which we derive an holy Reverence and Veneration to the helpless Condition of Childhood.”

We find further, that the Citizen's Daughters were allowed a Sort of Prætexta, which they wore 'till the Day of Marriage. Thus Cicero against Verres, Eripies pupillæ togam prætextam. And Propertius, Mox tibi jam facilis cessit prætexta maritis. The Pretori and Consules too (if not all the Senators) at the Ludi Romani, made Use of the Prætexta (e). And the Matrons on the Capitine Nona celebrated the Festival in this Sort of Gown (f).

(a) Mar. Val. Max. lib. 1. c. 6. (b) Plin. lib. 8. c. 11. s. 1. Ovid. 5. (c) Plin. lib. 8. (d) Isid. lib. 1. c. 1. (e) Cic. Philipp. 2. (f) Varro de Ling. Lat. lib. 5.

The Toga pura was the ordinary Garment of private Persons when they appeared abroad, so called because it had not the least Addition of Purple to the White; we meet with the same Gown under the Name of Virilis and Libera: It was called Toga Virilis, or the manly Gown, because when the Youths came to Man's Estate, or to the Age of seventeen Years, they changed the Prætexta for this Habit, as was before observed; on which Occasion the Friends of the Youngster carried him into the Forum (or sometimes into the Capitol) and attired him in the new Gown with Abundance of Ceremony; this they called dies tirocinii, the Day on which he commenced a Tiro, in relation to the Army, wherein he was now capacitated to serve.

It had the Name of Toga libera, because at this Time the young Men entered on a State of Freedom, and were delivered from the Power of their Tutors and Instructors. Thus the young Gentleman intimates in Persius:

*Cum primum pavido custos mihi purpura cessit,
Bullaque succinctus laribus donata pendit;
Cum blandi comites, totaque impune suburra
Permisi sparsisse oculos jam candidus umbo.* Sat. 5. 30.

When first my childish Robe resign'd its Charge,
And left me unconfin'd to live at large;
When now my golden Bulla (hung on high
To Household Gods) declar'd me past a Boy;
And my White Plaits proclaim'd my Liberty;
When with my wild Companions I could roll
From Street to Street, and sin without Controul.

[Mr. Dryden.]

But, for all this Liberty, they had one remarkable Restraint, being obliged for the first whole Year to keep their Attas within their Gown, as an Argument of Modesty. This Cicero observes, Nobis quidem olim annus erat unus ad exhibendum Frachium togæ constitutus (a).

The Toga pulla and sordida are very commonly confounded, yet, upon a strict Enquiry, it will appear that the first Sort was proper to Persons in Mourning, being made of Black Cloth, whence the Persons were called atrati. The Toga sordida was Black as well as the other, but from a different Cause, having grown so by the long wearing and felling of it; and this (as has been already observed) was worn by the Prisoners at their

Tryal, as well as by the ordinary People. It may here be remarked, that the Pullati, whom we meet with in the Classics, were not only those who wore the Toga pulla, or the Toga sordida, but such too as were attired in the Penulæ or Lacernæ, which were usually black. Thus the learned Casaubon interprets pullatorum turba in Suetonius (a); and Quintilian calls the Rabble pullos circulus (b), and pullata turba (c). Hence it may be reasonably be conjectured, that when the Roman State was turned into a Monarchy, the Gowns began to be laid aside by Men of the lower Rank, the Penulæ and Lacernæ being introduced in their Room, and commonly worn without them, or sometimes over them; this Irregularity had gained a great Head, even in Augustus's Time, who, to rectify it in some Measure, commanded the Ædiles that they should suffer no Person in the Forum or Circus to wear the Lacerna over his Gown, as was then an ordinary Practice. The same excellent Prince taking Notice at a publick Meeting of an innumerable Company of Rabble in these indecent Habits, cried out with Indignation, En /

Romanos rerum dominos gentemque togatam! (d)

The Toga picta, purpurea, palmata, the consular Trabea, the Paludamentum, and the Chlamys, had very little Difference (except that the last but one is often given to military Officers in general, and sometimes passes for the common Soldier's Coat) (e); and are promiscuously used one for the other, being the Robes of State proper to the Kings, Consuls, Emperors and all Generals during their Triumph. This Sort of Gown was called picta from the rich Embroidery, with Figures in Phrygian Work; and purpurea, because the Ground-work was Purple. The Toga palmata indeed very seldom occurs, but may probably be supposed the same with the former, called so on the same Account as the Tunica palmata, which will be described hereafter. That it was a Part of the triumphal Habit Martial intimates,

*I comes, & magnos illasa merere triumphos,
Palmatæque duces (jed citò) redde togæ.* vii. 1.

Antiquaries are very little agreed in Reference to the Trabea. Paulus Aemilius was certainly out, when he fancied it to be the same as the Toga picta, and he is accordingly corrected by Grævius (a). The vulgar Opinion follows the Distinction of Servius and Scaliger into three Sorts, one proper to the Kings, another to the Consuls, and a third to the Augurs. But Lipsius (b) and Rubenius (c) acknowledged only one proper Sort of Trabea belonging to the Kings; being a White Gown bordered with Purple, and adorned with calvi or trabes of Scarlet: Whereas the Vests of the Consuls, and the Augurs, and the Emperors, were called by the same Name, only because they were made in the same Form. For the old Paludamentum of the Generals was all Scarlet, only bordered with Purple; and the Chlamydes of the Emperors were all Purple, commonly beautified with a golden or embroidered Border:

(a) A. G. J. cap. 40. (d) Lib. 2, cap. 12. (e) Lib. 6, cap. 4. (f) Sueton. A. G. J. cap. 40. (g) Eccl. de Eccl. cap. 11.

Sidoniam picto chlamydem circumdata limbo. Virg. Æn. 4.

When the Emperors were themselves Consuls, they wore a Trabea adorned with Gems, which were allowed to none else. Claudian, in his Poems on the third, fourth, and sixth Consulship of Honorius, alludes expressly to this Custom:

—— Cinctus mutata Gabinos

Dives Hydaspeis augefeat purpura gemmis.

And again,

——— Asperat Indus

Velamenta lapis, pretiosaque fila smaragdis

Ducta virent———

And in the last,

Membraque gemmato Trabeæ viridantia cinctu.

There are several other Names under which we sometimes find the Gown, which have not yet been explained, nor would be of much Use, if thoroughly understood: Such as the Toga nudulata, sericulata, rasa, paverata, Phryxiana, scutulata, &c. See Ferrar. de Re Vest. lib. 2. cap. 10.

The Tunica, or close Coat, was the common Garment worn within Doors by men, and Abroad under the Gown: The Protelarii, the Capite censi, and the rest of the Diegs of the City, could not afford to wear the Toga, and so went in their Tunics; whence Horace calls the Rabble tunicatus popellus, and the Author of the Dialogue de Claris Oratoribus, populus tunicatus. The old Romans, as Gellius informs us, (d) at first were clothed only in the Gown. In a little Time they found the Convenience of a short strait Tunic, that did not cover the Arms; like the Græcian iḡquidēs. Afterwards they had Sleeves coming down to the Elbow, but no farther. Hence Suetonius tells us, that Cæsar was remarkable in his Habit, because he wore the Laticlavian Tunic, closed with Gatherings about his Wrist (a). Rubenius thinks he might use this Piece of Singularity to show himself descended from the Trojans, to whom Romulus objects, in Virgil, as an Argument of their Effeminacy.

Et tunicae manicas, & habent redimicula mitræ (b).

And Iulus, or Ascanius, is still to be seen dressed after the same Fashion, in some old Gems (c).

Yet in the Declension of the Empire, the Tunics did not only reach down to the Ankles, whence they are called Talares, but had Sleeves too coming down to the Hands, which gave them the Name of Chirodotæ. And now it was counted as scandalous to appear without Sleeves, as it had been hitherto to be seen in them. And therefore, in the Writers of that Age, we commonly find the accused Persons at a Trial habited in the Tunic without Sleeves, as a Mark of Infamy and Disgrace (d).

The several Sorts of the Tunic were the Palmata, the Angusticlavia, and the Laticlavia.

The Tunica Palmata was worn by Generals in a Triumph, and perhaps always under the Toga Picta. It had its Name either from the great Breadth of the Clavi, equal to the Palm of the Hand; or else from the Figures of Palms, embroidered on it (e).

The whole Body of the Criticks are strangely divided about the Clavi. Some fancy them to have been a Kind of Flowers interwoven in the Cloth: Others will have them to be the Buttons or Clasps by which the Tunic was held together. A third Sort conceived, that the Latus clavus was nothing else but a Tunic bordered with Purple. Scaliger thinks the Clavi did not belong properly to the Vell, but hung down from the Neck, like Chains and Ornaments of that Nature. But the most general Opinion makes them to have been Studs or Pearls something like Heads of Nails, of Purple or Gold, worked into the Tunic.

All the former Conjectures are learnedly confuted by the accurate Rubenius, who endeavours to prove that the Clavi were no more than Purple Lines or Streaks coming along the Middle of the Garments, which were afterwards improved to golden and embroidered Lines of the same Nature. We must not therefore suppose them to have received their Name as an immediate Allusion to the Heads of Nails, to which they bore no Resemblance; but may remember that the Ancients used to inlay their Cups and other precious Utensils with Studs of Gold, or other ornamental Materials. These, from their Likeness to Nail-Heads, they called in general Clavi. So that it was very natural to bring the same Word to signify these Lines of Purple, or other Colours which were of a different Kind from all the rest of the Garment, as those ancient Clavi were of a different Colour and Figure from the Vessels which they adorned.

These Streaks were either transverse or straight down the Vest; the former were used only in the Liveries of the Popæ and other publick Servants, by the Musicians, and some Companies of Artificers, and now and then by Women, being termed Paragaudæ. The proper Clavi came straight down the Vest, one of them making the Tunic, which they called the Angusticlave, and two the Laticlave.

However this Opinion has been applauded by the Learned, Monsieur Dacier's Judgement of the Matter cannot fail to meet with as kind a Reception.

He tells us, that the Clavi were no more than the purple Galloons, with which they bordered the Fore-part of the Tunic, on both Sides, and the Place where it came together. The broad Galloons made the Laticlave; and the narrow the Angusticlave. Therefore they are strangely mistaken, who make the only Difference between the two Vests to consist in this, that the one had but a single Clavus, the other two, and that the Senatorian Clavus, being in the Middle of the Vest, could possibly be but one. For it is very plain they had each of them two Galloons, binding the two Sides of the Coat where it opened before; so that, joining together with the Sides, they appeared just in the Middle; whence the Greeks called such a Vest μεσσηρρεον. That the Galloons were sewed on both Sides of the Coat, is evident beyond Dispute, from the following Passage of Varro: Nam si quis tunicam ita consuit, ut altera plagula sit angustis clavis, altera latis, utraque pars in suo genere caret analogia. For if any one should sew a Coat in this Manner, that one Side should have a broad Galloon, and the other a narrow one, neither Part has any Thing properly answering to it. As to the Name of the Clavi he thinks there needs no further Reason to be be given, than that the Ancients called any Thing, which was made with Design to be put upon another Thing, Clavus (a).

It has been a received Opinion, that the Angusticlave distinguished the Knight from the common People, in the same Manner as the Laticlave did the Senators from those of the Equestrian Rank; but Rubenius avers, that there was no Manner of Difference between the Tunic of the Knights, and those of the Commons. This Conjecture seems to be favoured by Appian, in the second Book of his History, where he tells us, ὁ δαυλὸν ἐστὶ, τὸ σχῆμα τοῖς δεσπόταις ὁμοίος, χωρὶς γὰρ τῆς βαλευτικῆς ἢ ἄλλης ἰσολῆ τοῖς δεσπόταις ἐπίκοιτος. The Slave in Habits goes like his Master, and, excepting only the Senator's Robe, all other Garments are common to the Servants. And Pliny, when he says that the Rings distinguished the Equestrian Order from the common People, as their Tunic did the Senate from those that wore the Rings, would not probably have omitted the other Distinction, had it been real. Besides both these Authorities, Lampridius, in the Life of Alexander Severus, confirms the present Assertion. He acquaints us, that the aforesaid Emperor had some Thoughts of assigning a proper Habit to Servants different from that of their Masters: But his great Lawyers, Ulpian and Paulus, dissuaded him from the Project, as what would infallibly give Occasion to much Quarrelling and Dissension; so that, upon the whole, he was contented only to distinguish the Senators from the Knights by their Clavus.

But all this Argument will come to nothing, unless we can clear the Point about the Use of the Purple among the Romans, which the Civilians tell us was strictly forbid the Common People under the Emperors. It may therefore be observed, that all the Prohibitions of this Nature were restrained to some particular Species of Purple. Thus Julius Cæsar forbade the Use of the Conchylian Garments, or the ἀραργίδες (b). And Nero afterwards prohibited the ordinary Use of the Amethystine, or Tyrian Purple (c). These Conjectures of Rubenius need no better Confirmation than that they are repeated and approved by the most judicious Grævius (d).

According to this Opinion, it is an easy Matter to reconcile the Contest between Alamutius and Lipsius, and the inferior Criticks of both Parties, about the Colour of the Tunic, the former asserting it to be Purple, and the other White: For it is evident, it might be called either, if we suppose the Ground-Work to have been White, with the Addition of these Purple Lists or Galoons.

(a) Dacier on Hæc. lib. 2. Sat. 5. (b) Sueton. Jul. cap. 43. (c) Ibid. Neron. cap. 32. (d) Sueton. Jul. 43. Orat. 10. Demosthen. 10.

As to the Persons who had the Honour of wearing the Laticlave, it may be maintained, that the Sons of those Senators, who were Patricians, had the Privilege of using this Vest in their Childhood, together with the Prætexta. But the Sons of those Senators, who were not Patricians, did not put on the Laticlave, till they applied themselves to the Service of the Commonwealth, and to bear Offices (a). Yet Augustus changed this Custom, and gave the Sons of any Senators Leave to assume the Laticlave presently after the Time of their putting on the Toga Virilis, though they were not yet capable of Honours (b). And by the particular Favour of the Emperors, the same Privilege was allowed to the more splendid Families of the Knights. Thus Ovid speaks of himself and Brother, who are known to have been of the Equestrian Order:

*Interea, tacito passu, labentibus armis,
Liberior fratri sumpta mihiq; toga;
Induiturque humeris cum lato purpura clavo, &c. (c).*

And Statius of Metius Celer, whom in another Place he terms Splendidissimus (d), the proper Style of the Knights:

———*Puer hic sudavit in armis
Notus adhuc tantum majoris munere clavi (e).*

Besides the Gown and Tunic, we hardly meet with any Garments of the Roman Original, or that deserve the Labour of an Enquiry into their Difference. Yet, among these, the Lacerna and the Penula occur more frequently than any other. In the old Gloss upon Persius, Sat. 1. Ver. 68. they are both called Pallia; which Identity of Names might probably arise from the near Resemblance they bore one to the other, and both to the Græcian Pallium. The Lacerna was first used in the Camp, but afterwards admitted into the City, and worn upon their Gowns, to defend them from the Weather. The Penula was sometimes used with the same Design, but, being shorter and fitter for Expedition, it was chiefly worn upon a Journey (f)

(a) Pliny, lib. 8. Epist. 23. (b) Sueton, Aug. cap. 37. (c) Triflinus, lib. iv. Eleg. 10. (d) Præfat. ad l. 3. Sylvarum. (e) Sylv. l. 3. corn. 2. (f) Lips. Elect. l. 1. c. 13, & Dr. Holiday on Juvenal, Sat. 1.

Rubenius will have the Lacerna and the Penula to be both a close-bodied Kind of Frocks, girt about the Middle, the only Difference between them being, that the Penulae were always brown, the Lacernæ of no certain Colour; and that the Gucullus, the Cowl or Hood, was sewed on the former, but worn as a distinct Thing from the other (a). But Ferrarius, who has spent a whole Book in animadverting on that Author, wonders that any Body should be so ignorant as not to know these two Garments to have been quite distinct Species (b).

It will be expected that the Habits of the Roman Priests should be particularly described; but we have no certain Intelligence, only what concerned the chief of them, the Augurs, the Flamens, and the Pontifices. The Augurs wore the Tra-bea, first dyed with Scarlet, and afterwards with Purple. Rubenius takes the Robe, which Herod in Derision put on our Saviour, to have been of this Nature, because St. Matthew calls it Scarlet, and St. Luke Purple. Cicero useth Dibaphus (a Garment twice dyed) for the Augural Robe (c).

The proper Robe of the Flamens was the Læna, a Sort of Purple Chlamys, or almost a double Gown fastened about the Neck, with a Buckle or Clasp. It was interwoven curiously with Gold, so as to appear very splendid and magnificent. Thus Virgil describes his Hæro in his Habit,

———Tyrioque ardebat maurice læna
Demissa ex humeris: dives quæ munera Dido
Fecerat, & tenui telas discreverat auro. Æn. 4. 262.

The Pontiffs had the Honour of using the Prætexta; and so had the Epulones, as we learn from Livy, Lib. 43.

The Priests were remarkable for their Modesty in Apparel, and therefore they made Use only of the common Purple, never affecting the more chargeable and splendid. Thus Cicero, Vestitus asper nostra hac purpura plebeia ac pene fusca (d). He calls it our Purple, because he himself was a Member of the College of Augurs.

There are two farther Remarks which may be made in Reference to the Habits in general. First, that in Time of any publick Calamity, it was an usual Custom to change their Apparel, as an Argument of Humility and Contrition; of which we meet with many Instances in History. On such

(a) De Laticlav. lib. 1. cap. 6. (b) Analect. d. R. Feft. cap. ult. (c) Epist. Famil. lib. 2. Epist. 16. (d) Pro Sextia.

Occasions the Senators laid by the Laticlave, and appeared only in the Habit of Knights: The Magistrates threw aside the Prætexta, and came Abroad in the Senatorian Garb: the Knights left off their Rings, and the Commons changed their Gowns for the Sagum or Military Coat (a).

The other Remark is the Observation of the great Casaubon, that the Habit of the Ancients, and particularly of the Romans, in no Respect differed more from the modern Drefs, than in that they had nothing answering to our Breeches and Stockings, which, if we were to express in Latin, we should call femoralia and tibialia. Yet, instead of these, under their lower Tunics or Waistcoats, they sometimes bound their Thighs and Legs round with Silken Scarfs or Fasciæ; though these had now and then the Name of scæminatia or femoralia and tibialia, from the Parts to which they were applied (b).

As to the Habit of the other Sex, in the ancient Times of the Commonwealth, the Gown was used alike by Men and Women (c). Afterwards the Women took up the Stola and the Palla for their separate Drefs. The Stola was their ordinary Vest, worn within Doors, coming down to their Ankles: When they went abroad they flung over it the Palla or Pallium, a long open Manteau (d), which covered the Stola and their whole Body. Thus Horace,

Ad tales stola demissa & circumdata palla (e).

And Virgil describing the Habit of Camilla:

Pro crinali auro, pro longo tegminæ pallæ,

Tigridis exuviæ per dorsum a vertice pendent (f).

They dressed their Heads with what they called Vittæ and Fasciæ, Ribbons and thin Sashes; and the last Sort they twisted round their whole Body, next to the Skin, to make them slender; to which Terence alludes in his Eunuch (g).

Rubenius has found this Difference in the Stolæ, that those of the ordinary Women were white trimmed with golden Pearls (h):

Haud similis virgo est virginum nostrarum; quas Matres student Demissis humeris esse, vincto pectore, ut graciles fient.

The former Ovid makes to be the distinguishing Badge of honest Matrons and chaste Virgins.

Esse procul vittæ tenues, insigne pudoris (a).

And describing the chaste Daphne, he says,

Vitta coercebat positos sine lege capillos (b).

It is very observable, that the common Courtezans were not allowed to appear in the Stola, but obliged to wear a Sort of Gown, as a Mark of Infamy, by Reason of its Resemblance to the Habit of the opposite Sex. Hence in that Place of Horace,

————— Quid inter—

Est, in matrona, ancilla, peccæque togata? L. 1. S. 2. V. 53.

The most judicious Dacier understands by Togata the common Strumpet, in Opposition both to the Matron and the Servant Maid.

Some have thought that the Women (on some Account or other) wore the Lacerna too: But the Rise of this Fancy is owing to their Mistake of that Verse in Juvenal, Ipse lacernatæ cum se jactaret amicæ.

Where it must be observed, that the Poet does not speak of the ordinary Misses, but of the Eunuch Sporus, upon whom Nero made an Experiment in order to change his Sex. So that Juvenal's lacernata amica is no more than if we should say, a Mistress in Breeches.

The Attire of the Head and Feet will take in all that remains of this Subject. As to the first of these, it has been a former Remark, that the Romans ordinarily used none, except the Lappet of their Gown; and this was not a constant Cover, but only occasional, to avoid the Rain, or Sun, or other accidental Inconveniencies. Hence it is that we see none of the old Statues with any on their Heads, besides now and then a Wreath, or something of that Nature. Eusebius, on the first of the Odyssees, tells us, that the Latins derived this Custom of going bare-headed from the Greeks, it being notorious, that, in the Age of the Heroes, no Kind of Hats or Caps were at all in Fashion: Nor is any such Thing to be met with in Homer. Yet at some particular Times we find the Romans using some Sort of Covering for the Head; as at the Sacrifices, at the publick Games, at the Feast of Saturn, upon a Journey, or a warlike Expedition. Some Persons too were allowed to have their Heads always covered, as Men who had been lately made free, and were thereupon shaved close on their Head, might wear the Pileus, both as a Defence from the Cold, and as a Badge of their Liberty. And the same Privilege was granted to Persons under any Indisposition.

(a) Metamorph. lib. 1. Fab. 9.

(b) Lippius de Amphitheat. cap. 19.

As for the several Sorts of Coverings designed for these Uses, many of them have been long confounded beyond any Possibility of a Distinction; and the learned Salmasius (a) has observed, that the Mitra and the Pileus, the Cucullus, the Galerus, and the Pallium, were all Coverings of the Head, very little differing from one another, and promiscuously used by Authors; however, there are some of them which deserve a more particular Enquiry.

The Galerus Vossius (b) derives from Galea, the Roman Helmet, to which we must suppose it to have borne some Resemblance. Servius, when he reckons up the several Sorts of Priests Caps, makes the Galerus one of them, being composed of the Skin of the Beast offered in Sacrifice: The other two being the Apex, a stitched Cap in the Form of a Helmet, with the Addition of a little Stick fixed on the Top, and wound about with white Wool, properly belonging to the Flamines; and the Cucullus, a Woollen Turban, much like the former, proper to the High Priest. By the Galerus it is likely he means the Albo-Galerus, made of the Skin of a white Beast offered in Sacrifice, with the Addition of some Twigs taken from a wild Olive-tree, and belonging only to Jupiter's Flamen; yet we find a Sort of Galerus in Use among the ordinary Men, and the Galericulum (which some called Galerus) common to both Sexes: This was a Skin so neatly dressed with Men or Women's Hair, that it could not easily be distinguished from the natural; it was particularly used by those who had thin Heads of Hair, as Suetonius reports of Nero (c); as also by the Wrestlers, to keep their own Hair from receiving any Damage by the nasty Oils with which they were rubbed all over before they exercised. This we learn from Martial's Distich on the Galericulum: xiv. 50.

*Ne lutet immundum nitidos ceroma capillos,
Hoc poteris madidas condere pelle comas.*

The Pileus was the ordinary Cap or Hat worn at publick Shows and Sacrifices, and by the freed Men; for a Journey they had the Petasis, differing only from the former in that it had broader Brims, and bore a nearer Resemblance to our Hats, as appears from the common Pictures of Mercury; and hence it took its Name from πῆλᾱνναι, to open or spread out (d).

The Mitra, the Tiara, and the Diadem, though we often meet with them in Roman Authors, are none of them beholden to that that Nation for their Original. The Mitre seems to owe its Invention to the Trojans, being a crooked Cap tied under the Chin with Ribbons; it belonged only to the Women among the Romans, and is attributed to the foreign Courtisans that set up their Trade in that City, such as the ———pizla lupa barbara mitra

in Juvenal; yet among the Trojans we find it in Use among the Men. Thus Romulus scouts them in Virgil,

Et tunicae manicas & habent redimicula mitrae:

O vere Phrygiae; neque enim Phryges! (a)

And even Aeneas himself is by Iarbas described in this Dress,

Mænia mentum mitra crinemque madentem

Subnexus.

Æn. 4. 216.

The Tiara was the Cap of State used by all the Eastern Kings and great Men, only with this Difference, that the Princes wore it with a short strait Top, and the Nobles with the Point a little bending downwards (b).

The Diadem belonged to the Kings of Rome as well as to the foreign Princes; this seems to have been no more than a white Scarf or Fascia bound about the Head, like that which composeth the Turkish Turban. Those who are willing to find some nearer Resemblance between the Diadem and our modern Crowns, may be convinced of their Mistake from that Passage of Plutarch, where he tells us of a Princess that made Use of her Dinaem to hang herself with (c).

These white Fasciae among the Romans were always looked on as the Marks of Sovereignty; and therefore when Pompey the Great appeared commonly abroad with a white Scarf wound about his Leg, upon Pretence of a Bruise or an Ulcer, those who were jealous of his growing Powers did not fail to interpret it as an Omen of his affecting the supreme Command; and one Favonius plainly told him, it made little Odds on what Part he wore the Diadem, the Intention being much the same (d).

To descend to the Feet, the several Sorts of the Roman Shoes, Slippers, &c. which most frequently occur in reading, are the Perones, the Calcei lunati, the Mullei, the Soleæ and Crepidæ, and the Caligæ, besides the Cothernus and Soccus, which have been already described.

(a) Æn. a. 616. (b) Dionysius ad Rhod. lib. 5. cap. 35. (c) Plut. in Lucio.
(d) Valer. Max. lib. 6. cap. 2.

The Perones were a Kind of high Shoes, rudely formed of raw Hides, and reaching up to the Middle of the Leg; they were not only used by the Country People, as some imagine, but in the City too by Men of ordinary Rank: Nay, Rubenius avers, that in the elder Times of the Commonwealth, the Senators, as well as others, went in the Peros (a); however, when they came to be a little polished, they left this clumsy Wear to the Ploughmen and Labourers, and we scarce find them applied to any one else by the Authors of the flourishing Ages. Thus Perfius brings in the ————— Peronatus arator : S. 5. V. 102.

And Juvenal,

————— Quem non pudet alto

Per glaciem perone tegi ————— S. 14. V. 186.

Virgil, indeed, makes some of his Soldiers wear the Pero, but then they were only a Company of plain Rusticks, Legio agrestis, as he calls them; besides they wore it on but one Foot :

————— Vestigia nuda sinistri

Instituere pedis, crudus teget altera pero. Æn. 7. 690.

The Calcei lunati were proper to the Patricians, to distinguish them from the Vulgar, so called from an Half-moon in Ivory worn upon them. Baldwin will have the Half-moon to have served instead of a Fibula or Buckle (b); but Rubenius (c) refutes this Conjecture, by shewing from Philostratus that it was worn by Way of Ornament, not on the Fore-part of the Shoe, like the Buckle, but about the Ankle. Plutarch in his Roman Questions, gives Abundance of Reasons why they used the Half-moon rather than any other Figure; but none of his Fancies have met with any Approbation from the learned. The common Opinion makes this Custom an Allusion to the Number of Senators at their first Institution, which, being a Hundred, was signified by the numeral Letter C.

Yet the Patricians, before they arrived at the Senatorian Age, and even before they put on the Prætecta, had the Privilege of using the Half-moon on their Shoes. Thus Statius, Sylv. v. 2. 27.

Sic te, clare puer, genitum sibi curia sensit :

Primaque Patricia clausit vestigia luna.

(a) De Architectura, lib. 2. cap. 1.
Lenæus, lib. 2. cap. 4.

(b) De Calceis Antiq. cap. 9.

(c) De

As for the Senators, who were not Patricians, they did not indeed wear the Half-moon; but that Ornament seems not to have been only Difference between the Senatorian and the common Shoes; for the former are commonly represented as black, and coming up to the Middle of the Leg, as in Horace, Book i. Sat. 6. 27.

————— Nigros medium impediit cras Pellibus.

Rubenius will have this understood only of the four black Straps, which he says fastened the Senators Shoes, being tied pretty high on the Leg (a). Dacier tells us the Senators had two Sorts of Shoes, one for Summer, and the other for Winter; the Summer Shoes he describes with such Leathern Straps crossing one another many Times about the Leg, and nothing but a Sole at the Bottom: These he calls Campagi; though Rubenius attributes this Name to a Sort of Caligæ worn by the Senators under the later Emperors (b). The Winter Shoes, he says, were made of an entire black Skin, or sometimes a white one, reaching up to cover the greatest Part of the Leg, without any open Place, except on the Top (c).

It is uncertain whether the Calcei Mullei were so called from the Colour of the Mullet, or whether they lent a Name to that Fish from their reddish Dye; they were at first the peculiar Wear of the Alban Kings, afterwards of the Kings of Rome, and upon the Establishment of the free State, were appropriated to those Persons who had borne any Curule Office; but perhaps they might be worn only on great Days, at the Celebration of some publick Sports, when they were attired in the whole Triumphant Habit, of which too these Shoes made a Part. Julius Caesar, as he was very singular in his whole Habit, so was particularly remarkable for wearing the Mullei on ordinary Days, which he did to shew his Descent from the Alban Kings (d). In Colour and Fashion they resembled the Cothurni, coming up to the Middle of the Leg, though they did not cover the whole Foot, but only the Sole, like Sandals (e). Dacier informs us, that at such Time as the Emperors took up the Use of these red Shoes, the Curule Magistrates changed the Fashion for embroidered ones (f).

The Roman Soleæ were a Sort of Sandals or Pantoffles, without any upper Leather, so that they covered only the Sole of the Foot, being fastened above the Straps with Buckles: These were the ordinary Fashion of the Women, and therefore counted scandalous in the other Sex. Thus Cicero exposeth Verres (a), and Clodius (b), for using this indecent Wear; and Livy acquaints us, that the great Scipio was censured on the same Account (c); yet, upon all Occasions of Mirth and Recreation, or lawful Indulgence, it was customary for the Men to go thus loosely shod, as at Entertainments, and at the publick Shows of all Sorts in the Circos or Amphitheatres.

The Crepida which now and then occur in Roman Authors, are generally supposed to be the same as the Solea, under the Greek Name ὑψηλίδες. But Baldwin is so nice as to assign this Difference, that the Crepida had two Soles, whereas the Solea consisted but of one; therefore he is not willing to be beholden to the Greeks for the Word, but thinks it may be derived from the Crepitus, or Creating that they made, which could not be so well conceived in those which had but a single Leather (d). That the Grecian ὑψηλίδες did really make such a Kind of Noise, which we cannot easily imagine of the Solea, is plain from the common Story of Momus, who being brought to give his Censure of Venus, could find no Fault, only that her ὑψηλίδες, or Slipper, creaked a little too much.

The Caliga was the Soldiers proper Shoe, made in the Sandal Fashion, so as not to cover the upper Part of the Foot, though it reached to the Middle of the Leg. The Sole was of Wood, like our old Galoches, or the Chabots of the French Peasants, and stuck full of Nails; these Nails were usually so very long in the Shoes of the Scouts and Centinels, that Suetonius (e) and Tertullian (f) call those Caligæ Speculatores, as if, by mounting the Wearer to a higher Pitch, they gave a greater Advantage to the Sight.

It was from these Caligæ, that the Emperor Caligula took his Name, having been born in the Army, and afterwards bred up in the Habit of a common Soldier (g). And hence Juvenal (h), and Suetonius (i), use Caligati for the common Soldiers, without the Addition of a Substantive.

CHAP. IX.

Of the ROMAN Marriages.

THE Marriages of the Romans, which have been so learnedly explained by so many eminent Hands, as the great Lawyers Tirquael, Sigonius, Briffonius, and the two Hottomans, will appear very intelligible from a diligent Enquiry into the Espousals, the Persons that might lawfully marry with one another, the proper Season for Marriage, the several Ways of contracting Matrimony, the Ceremonies of the Wedding, and the Causes and Manner of Divorces.

The Espousals, or Contract before Marriage, was performed by an Engagement of the Friends on both Sides, and might be done as well between absent Persons as present, as well in Private as before Witnesses; yet the common Way of Betrothing was by Writings drawn up by common Consent, and sealed by both Parties. Thus Juvenal, Sat. 6. 199.

*Si tibi legitimis pactam junctamque tabellis
Non es amaturus.*

And again, Sat. 10. 336.

————— Veniet cum Signatoribus Auspex.

Besides this, the Man sent a Ring as a Pledge to the Woman, which, in Pliny's Time was used to be of Iron, without any Stone in it (a). Thus the same Satyrist,

*Conventum tamen & pactum & sponsalia nostra
Tempestate parat, jamque a tonsore magistro
Paleris, & digito pignus fortasse deaisti.* Sat. 6. 25.

There was no Age determined by the Laws for Espousals, but they might be made at any Time, provided that both Parties were sensible of the Obligations, which they were not supposed to be 'till their 7th Year; yet Augustus afterwards ordered that no Espousals should be esteemed valid, except such as were consummated by the Nuptials within two Years Time (b).

No Roman might marry with any other than a Roman: but when this was extended to any free Denizen of the City, though born in any other Parts; for thus Dionysius (a) reports of the Latins, Livy (b) of the Campanians, and Cicero (c) of the Inhabitants of Aricia; yet in Rome we meet with one eminent Restraining about these Matters, and that is a Law of the Decemviri, prohibiting any Marriage between the Patrician Families and the Plebeians. But within seven or eight Years, the Commons had given so many dangerous Tokens of their Resentment of this Injury, that upon the Motion of Canuleius, Tribune of the People, the Consuls were even forced to give Consent to the Enacting of a contrary Decree, allowing a free Alliance in Marriage between Persons of all Orders and Degrees (d).

The Romans were very superstitious in Reference to the particular Time of Marriage, fancying several Days and Seasons very unfortunate to this Design; the Kalends, Nones, and Ides of every Month, was strictly avoided; so was the whole Feast of the Parentalia in February, as Ovid observes, Fast. 2. 561.

Conde tuas, Hymenæ, faces, & ab ignibus atris Aufer; habent alias mæsta sepulchra faces.

Go, Hymen, stop the long expecting Dames,
And hide thy Torches from the dismal Flames;
Thy Presence would be fatal while we mourn,
And at sad Tombs must other Tapers burn.

The whole Month of May was looked on as ominous to contracting Matrimony, as Plutarch acquaints us in his Roman Questions, and Ovid, Fast. 5. 487.

*Nec viduæ tædis eadè, nec virginis apta
Tempora, quæ nupsit non diuturna fuit.
Hac quoque de causa, si te proverbia tangunt,
Mense malas Maio nubere vulgus ait.*

No Tapers then should burn, nor ever Bride
Link'd at this Season long her Bliss enjoy'd;
Hence our wise Masters of the Proverbs say,
The Girls are all stark naught that wed in May.

In short, the most happy Season, in all Respects, for celebrating the nuptial Solemnity, was that which followed the Ides of June. Thus Ovid, speaking of his Daughter:

*Hanc ego cum vellem genero dare, tempora tædis
Apta requirebam, quæque cavenda forent.*

(a) Lib. 36.

(b) Lib. 38.

(c) In Philipp.(d) Liv. lib. 4.

*Tunc mihi post sacras monstratur Junius Idus
Utilis & nuptis utilis esse viris.* Fast. v. 221.

Resolv'd to match the Girl, I try'd to find
What Days unprosperous were, what Moons were kind;
After June's sacred Ides my Fancy slay'd,
Good to the Man, and happy to the Maid.

The three Ways of contracting Matrimony were, farre, coemptio, and usu, which fall properly under the Consideration of the civil Law; the main Difference of them, in short, was this: Confarreatio was, when the Matrimonial Rites were performed with solemn Sacrifices, and Offerings of burnt Cakes, by the Pontifex Maximus, and the Flamen Dialis. Pliny says this was the most solemn Tie of all (a); yet we are assured, that, after some Time, it was almost universally laid aside, as thought to include too many troublesome Ceremonies (b). A Divorce, after this Way of Marriage, Festus calls Diffarreatio. Coemptio was, when the Persons solemnly bound themselves to one another by the Ceremony of giving and taking a Piece of Money. The Marriage was said to be made by Use, when, with the Consent of her Friends, the Woman had lived with the Man a whole Year compleat, without being absent three Nights, at which Time she was reckoned in all Respects a lawful Wife, though not near so closely joined as in the former Cases.

The nuptial Ceremonies were always begun with the taking of Omens by the Auspices. Hence Tully, Nubit genero socrus nullis auspiciis, nullis auctoribus, funestis omnibus omnium (c).

In dressing the Bride, they never omitted to divide her Locks with the Head of a Spear, either as a Token that their Marriages first began by War, and Acts of Hostility upon the Rape of the Sabine Virgins (d); or as an Omen of bearing a valiant and warlike Offspring; or to remind the Bride, that being married to one of a martial Race, she should use herself to no other than a plain unaffected Dress; or because the greatest Part of the Nuptial Care is referred to Juno, to whom the Spear is sacred, whence she took the Name of Dea Quiris. Quiris among the Ancients signifying this Weapon (e). Ovid alludes to this Custom in the second of his Fasti: 559.

*Nec tibi quæ cupida matura videre matri,
Comat virgineas hasta recurva comas.*

Thou whom thy Mother frets to see a Maid,
Let no bent Spear thy Virgin Locks divide.

In the next Place they crowned her with a Chaplet of Flowers, and put on her Veil or Flammeum, proper to this Occasion, Thus Catullus, lib. 6.

*Cinge tempora floribus
Suaveolentis amaraci:
Flammeum cape.*

And Juvenal, describing Messalina, when about to marry Silius:

——— *Dudum sedet illa parato
Flammeolo.* Sat. 10.

Instead of her ordinary Clothes, she wore the Tunica recta, or common Tunic, called recta, from being woven upwards, of the same Nature with that which the young Men put on with their Manly Gown (a); this was tied about with a Girdle which the Bridegroom was to unloose.

Being dressed after this Manner, in the Evening she was led towards the Bridegroom's House by three Boys habited in the Prætexta, whose Fathers and Mothers were alive. Five Torches were carried to light her; for which particular Number Plutarch has troubled himself to find out several Reasons (b). A Distaff and a Spindle were likewise born along with her, in Memory of Caia Cæcilia, or Tanaquil, Wife to Tarquinius Priscus, a famous Spinster (c). And on the same Account the Bride called herself Caia, during the nuptial Solemnity, as a fortunate Name.

Being come to the Door, (which was garnished with Flowers and Leaves according to that of Catullus, lxii. 293.

Vestibulum ut melli velatum fronde vireret,) she bound about the Posts with woollen Lints, and washed them over with melted Tallow, to keep out Infection and Sorcery. This Custom Virgil alludes to; Æn. 4. 457.

*Præterea fuit in tectis de marmore templum
Conjugis antiqui, miro quod honore colebat, Velleribus niveis & fæsta fronde revinctum.*

Being to go into the House, she was not by any Means to touch the Threshold, but was lifted over by main Strength.

Either because the Threshold was sacred to Vesta, a most chaste Goddess, and so ought not to be defiled by one in these Circumstances: Or else, that it might seem a Piece of

(a) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 48.

(b) Rom. Quæst. 2.

(c) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 48.

Modestly to be compelled into a Place where she should cease to be a Virgin (a).

Upon her Entrance, she had the Keys of the House delivered to her, and was presented by the Bridegroom with two Vessels, one of Fire, the other of Water, either as an Emblem of Purity and Chastity, or as a Communication of Goods, or as an Earnest of sticking by one another in the greatest Extremities (b).

And now she and her Companions were treated by the Bridegroom at a splendid Feast; on which Occasion, the Sumptuary Laws allowed a little more Liberty than ordinary in the Expenses. This Kind of Treat was seldom without Musick, composed commonly of Flutes; the Company all the while singing Thalassius, or Thalassio, as the Greeks did Hymenæus. There are several Reasons given by Plutarch (c), for the Use of this Word: The common Opinion makes it an Admonishment to good Housewifery; the Greek Word ταλασία signifying Spinning; and among the Conditions which were agreed upon by the Sabines and Romans, after the Rape of the Virgins, this was one, that the Women should be obliged to no servile Office for their Husbands, any farther than what concerned Spinning.

At the same Time the Bridegroom threw Nuts about the Room for the Boys to scramble: Thus Virgil, Eclog. 8.

Sparge, marite, nuces——.

Out of the many Reasons given for this Custom, the most commonly received makes it a Token of their leaving childish Diversifements, and entering on a more serious State of Life: whence Nucibus relinquitis has passed into a Proverb. This Conjecture is favoured by Catullus, lib. 131.

Da nuces pueris, incers

Concubine: Satis diu

Lusisti nucibus. Lubet

Jam seruire Thalassio.

Concubine, nuces da.

In the mean Time the Genial Bed was got ready, and a Set of good old Wives, that had never been married but to one Man, placed the Bride on it with a great Deal of Ceremony. Thus Catullus, lib. 186.

Vos bonæ senibus viris

Cognitæ bene sæminæ,

Collocate puellulam.

Jam licet venias, marite, &c.

Nothing now remained but for the Bridegroom to loose her Girdle, a Custom that wants no Explanation; only it may be observed to have been of great Antiquity: Thus Moschus in his Story of Jupiter and Europa, 160.

— Ζεὺς δὲ πάλιν ἐτέρην ἀνελάξει μορφήν,

Λῦσε δὲ οἱ τάλιν μίτρην.

Homer, Odyss. 2.

Λίφην παρθενικὴν ζώνην.

And Musæus in Hero and Leander, 272.

Ὡς ἡ μὲν ταῦτ' εἶπεν, ὃδ' αὐτίκα λύσαστο μίτρην

Καὶ θεσμῶν ἐπέεσσιν ἀριστοῦς Κυβερνεῖσι.

There seldom wanted a Company of Boys, and mad Sparks got together to sing a Parcel of obscene Verses, which were tolerated on this Occasion. They consisted of a Kind of Fescennine Rhimes. Hence Catullus:

Nec diu taceat procaz

Fescennina locutio.

And Claudian:

Permissisque jocos turba licentior

Exultat a tetricis libera legibus.

The Day after the new married Man held a stately Supper, and invited all his old Companions to a Drinking Match, which they termed repotia.

The whole Subject of Divorces belongs entirely to the Lawyers, and the Distinction between repudium and divortium is owing to their Nicety: the first they make the breaking off the Contract, or Espousal; and the last a Separation after actual Matrimony. Plutarch mentions a very severe Law of Romulus, which suffered not a Wife to leave her Husband, but gave a Man the Liberty of turning off his Wife, either upon poisoning her Children, or counterfeiting his private Keys, or for the Crime of Adultery. But, if the Husband on any other Occasion put her away, he ordered one Moiety of his Estate to be given to his Wife, and the other to fall to the Goddesses Ceres, and that whosoever sent away his Wife, should make an Atonement to the Gods of the Earth (a). It is very remarkable that, almost six hundred Years after the Building of the City, one P. Servilius, or Carvilius Spurius, was the first of the Romans that ever put away his Wife (b).

The common Way of divorcing was by sending a Bill to the Woman, containing Reasons of the Separation, and the Tender of all her Goods which she brought with her; this they termed repudium mittere. Or else it was performed in her Presence before sufficient Witnesses, with the Formalities of tearing the Writings, refunding the Portion, taking away the Keys, and turning the Woman out of Doors. But however the Law of Romulus came to fail, it is certain that in later Times the Women too, as well as the Men, might sue for a Divorce, and enter on a separate Life. Thus Juvenal, Sat. 9. 74.

——— *Fugientem sæpe puellam
Amplexu rapui; tabulas quoque frigerat, & jam Signabat.*

And Martial, Lib. 10. Epig. 41.

Mense novo Maii veterem Proculeia maritum Deseris, atque jubes res sibi habere suas.

We have here a fair Opportunity to enquire into the Grounds of the common Opinion about borrowing and lending of Wives among the Romans. He that chargeth them most severely with this Practice, is the most learned Tertullian, in his Apology, ch. 39. Omnia indiscreta sunt apud nos, &c. All Things, (says he, speaking of the Christians) are common among us, except our Wives: We admit no Partnership in that one Thing, in which other Men are more professedly Partners, who not only make Use of their Friend's Bed, but very patiently expose their own Wives to a new Embrace: I suppose, according to the Institution of the most wise Ancients, the Græcian Socrates, and the Roman Cato, who freely lent out their Wives to their Friends. And presently after, O sapientiæ Atticæ & Romanæ gravitatis exemplum! leno est Philosophus & Censor. O wondrous Example of Attick Wisdom, and of Roman Gravity! a Philosopher and a Censor turn Pimps.

Chiefly on the Strength of this Authority, the Romans have been generally taxed with such a Custom; and a very great Man of our own Country (a) expresseth his Compliance with the vulgar Opinion, though he ingenuously extenuates the Fault in a parallel Instance. So much indeed must be granted, that though the Law made those Husbands liable to a Penalty, who either hired out their Wives for Money, or kept them after they had been actually convicted of Adultery, yet the bare Permission of that Crime did not fall under the Notice of the

(a) Sir William Temple's Introduction to the Hist. of Eng.

Civil Power. And Ulpian says expressly, ei qui patitur uxorem suam delinquere, matrimoniumque suum contemnit; quique contaminatione non indignatur, poena adulteratorum non infligitur. He that suffers his Wife to defile his Bed, and, contemning his matrimonial Contract, is not displeased at the Pollution, does not incur the Penalty of Adulterers. But it is almost impossible that this should give Occasion to such a Fancy, being no more than what is tolerated at present. It may therefore be alledged in Favour of the Romans, that this Opinion might probably have its Rise from the frequent Practice of that Sort of Marriage, according to which a Woman was made a Wife only by Profession and Use, without any farther Ceremony. This was the most incomplete of all Conjugal Ties: The Wife being so rather by the Law of Nature, than according to the Roman Constitution; and therefore she was not called Mater-familias, nor had any Right to inherit the Goods of her Husband; being supposed to be taken purely on the Account of procreating Issue, so that after the Bearing of three or four Children, she might lawfully be given to another Man.

As to the Example of Cato (not to urge that Tertullian has mistook the Censor for him of Utica, and so lost the Sting of his Sarcasm) the best Accounts of that Matter may be had from Strabo and Plutarch. The Place of Strabo is in his 7th Book: Ἰσχυροὶ δὲ περὶ τῶν Ταπύρων ὅτι αὐτοῖς εἰν νόμιμον τὰς γυναῖκας τὰς γαμιτὰς ἐκδιδόναι ἑτέροις ἀνδράσιν, ἐπειδὴν ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀνέλωνται δύο ἢ τρία τέκνα, καθάπερ καὶ Κάτω Ὀρίσινω δευθενὶ ἐξέδωκε τὴν Μαρτίαν ἐφ' ἡμῶν, κατὰ παλαιὸν Ῥωμαίων ἥθος. They report of these Tapyrians, that it is counted lawful among them to give away their Wives to other Men, after they have had two or three Children by them: As Cato in our Time, upon the Request of Hortensius, gave him his Wife Marcia, according to the old Custom of the Romans. Here by ἐκδιδόναι and ἐξέδωκε we should not understand the lending or letting out of Women, but the marrying them to new Husbands, as Plato useth ἐκδοσιν θυγατέραν ποιεῖν, to bestow Daughters in Marriage.

Plutarch, before he proceeds to his Relation, has premised that this Passage in the Life of Cato, looks like a Fable in a Play, and is very difficult to be cleared, or made out with any Certainty. His Narration is taken out of Thraseas, who had it from Alunatius, Cato's Friend and constant Companion, and runs to this Effect; .

“ Quintus Hortensius, a Man of signal Worth, and approved “ Virtue, was not content to live in Friendship and Fami“ liarity

"liarity with Cato, but desired also to be united to his Family,
 "by some Alliance in Marriage. Therefore waiting upon
 "Cato, he began to make a Proposal about taking Cato's
 "Daughter Portia from Bibulus, to whom she had already "borne three Children, and making her his own Wife; of"fering to restore her after she had borne him a Child, if Bi-
 "bulus was not willing to part with her altogether: Adding,
 "that although this, in the Opinion of Men, might seem "strange, yet in Nature it would appear honest and profitable
 "to the Publick, with much more to the same Purpose. Cato
 "could not but express his Wonder at the strange Project, but "withal approved very well of uniting their Houses: When
 "Hortensius, turning the Discourse, did not stick to acknow"ledge, that it was Cato's own Wife which he really desired.
 "Cato, perceiving his earnest Inclinations, did not deny his "Request, but said that Philip, being the Father of Marcia,
 "ought also to be consulted. Philip, being sent for, came,
 "and finding they were all agreed, gave his Daughter Marcia
 "to Hortensius, in the Presence of Cato, who himself also as"sisted at the Marriage."

So that this was nothing like lending a Wife out, but actually marrying her to another while her first Husband was alive, to whom she might be supposed to have come by that Kind of Matrimony, which is founded on the Right of Possession. And upon the whole, the Romans seem to have been hitherto unjustly taxed with the Allowance of a Custom not usually practised among the most barbarous and savage Part of Mankind,

CHAP. X.

Of the ROMAN Funerals.

THE most ancient and generally received Ways of Burying have been Interring and Burning, and both these we find at the same Time in Use among the Romans, borrowed in all Probability from the Græcians. That the Græcians interred their dead Bodies may, in short, be evinced from the Story of the Ephesian Matron in Petronius, who is described sitting and watching her Husband's Body laid in a Vault; and from the Argument which Solon brought to justify the Right of the Athenians to the Isle of Salamis, taken from the dead Bodies that were buried there, not after the Manner of their Competitors

the

the Megarensians, but according to the Athenian Fashion; for the Megarensians turned the Carcase to the East; and the Athenians to the West; and that the Athenians had a distinct Sepulchre for each Body, whereas the Megarensians put two or three into one (a). That the same People sometimes burnt their Dead is beyond Dispute, from the Testimony of Plutarch, who, speaking of the Death of Phocion, tells us, that for some Time none of the Athenians dared light a Funeral Pile to burn the Body after their Manner. As also from the Description of the Plague of Athens in Thucydides, ἐπὶ πυρὸς γὰρ ἀλλότριάς, &c. with the Translation of which Passage, Lucretius concludes his Poem;

*Namque suos consanguineos aliēna rogorum
Insuper extruēta ingenti clamore locabant,
Subdebantque faces, multo cum sanguine saepe
Rixantes potius quam corpora defererentur.*

To prove that both these Ways of Burial were used by the Romans, is almost unnecessary; for Burning is known by every one to have been their common Practice. And as for Interring, their great Lawgiver Numa particularly forbade the Burning of his own Body, but commanded it to be laid intire in a Stone Coffin (b). And we learn from Cicero (c), and Livy (d), that the Family of the Cornelii interred their Dead all along 'till the Time of Sylla the Dictator, who in his Will gave express Orders to have his Body burnt; probably to avoid the Indignitiess that might have been offered it after Burial by the Marian Faction, in Return for the Violence shown by Sylla's Soldiers to the Tomb and Relicks of Marius.

But although Burning was the ordinary Custom, yet in some particular Cases it was positively forbid, and looked on as the highest Impiety. Thus Infants, who died before the Breeding of Teeth, were inclosed unburnt in the Ground (e):

——— *Terra clauditur infans,
Et minor igne rogi.*

Juvenal. Sat. 15.

The Place set apart for the Interment of these Infants was called Suggrundarium. The same Superstition was observed in Reference to Persons who had been struck dead with Lightning or Thunder (f). For they never were burnt again, but after a great Deal of Ceremony performed by the Auspices, and the Sacrifice of a Sheep, were either put into the Earth, or sometimes let alone to lie upon the Ground where they had fallen. In both Cases the Place was presently inclosed either with a Stone Wall, or Stake, or sometimes only with a Rope, having the Nome of Bidental from the Bidens or Sheep that was offered. Perfius useth Bidental for the Person that had come to this unhappy End, ii. 26.

An qui non fibris ovium, Ergennaque jubente, Triste jaces lucis, evitandumque bidental.

For they fancied that wherever a Thunderbolt fell, the Gods had a particular Desire to have the Place sacred to their Worship; and therefore whether the Man had been killed or not, they used the same Superstition in hallowing the Ground (a).

The several Sorts of Funerals fall under the common Heads of Funus indicivum and Funus tacitum. The Funus indicivum had its Name ab indicendo from inviting, because on such Occasions there was made a general Invitation of the People by the Mouth of a publick Crier. This was celebrated with extraordinary Splendour and Magnificence, the People being presented with publick Shows, and other common Divertisements. The Funus Publicum, which we meet with so often, may be sometimes understood as entirely the same with the Indicitive Funeral, and sometimes only as a Species of it. It is the same when it denotes all the State and Grandeur of the more noble Funerals, such as were usually kept for rich and great Men. It is only a Species of the Indicitive Funeral, when either it signifies the Proclaiming of a Vacation, and an Injunction of publick Sorrow, or the Defraying the Charges of the Funeral out of the publick Stock. For it is probable that, at both these Solemnities, a general Invitation was made by the Crier; yet in this latter it was done by Order of the Senate, and in the former by the Will of the deceased Person, or the Pleasure of his Heirs. But no one will hence conclude, that the Funerals of all such rich Men were attended with the Formality of a Vacation, and an Order for publick Grief. For this was accounted the greatest Honour that could be showed to the Relicks of Princes themselves: Thus the Senate decreed a publick Funeral for Syphax, and the once great King of Macedon, who both died in Prison under the Power of the Romans (b).

(a) Dacier on Horace, Art. Poet. ver. 471. (b) Val. Max. lib. 5. cap. 1.

And Suetonius informs us, that Tiberius (a), and Vitellius (b), were buried with the same State; yet upon Account of having performed any signal Service to the Commonwealth, this Honour was often conferred on private Men, and sometimes upon Women too, as Dio relates of Attia the Mother of Julius Cæsar (c); and Xiphilin of Livia (d). Nor was this Custom peculiar to the Romans, for Laertius reports of Democritus, that deceased, after he had lived above a hundred Years, he was honoured with a publick Funeral. And Justin tells us, that the Inhabitants of Marseilles, then a Græcian Colony, upon the News of Rome's being taken by the Gauls, kept a publick Funeral to testify their Condolence of the Calamity (e).

There seems to have been different Sorts of publick Funerals in Rome, according to the Magistracies, or other Honours, which the deceased Persons had borne: As the Prætorium, the Consulare, the Censorium, and the Triumphale. The two last were by much the more magnificent, which though formerly distinguished, yet in the Time of the Emperors were joined in one, with the Name of Funus Censorium only, as Tacitus often useth the Phrase. Nor was the Censorium Funeral confined to private Persons, but the very Emperors themselves were honoured with the like Solemnity after their Deaths, as Tacitus reports of Claudius (f), and Capitolinus of Pertinax.

The Funus Tacitum, opposed to the Indigivæ, or Publick Funeral, was kept in a private Manner without the Solemnization of Sports, without Pomp, without a Marshall, or a general Invitation. Thus Seneca de Tranquil. Anim. Marti natus es: minus molestiarum habet funus tacitum. And Ovid. Trist. 1. Eleg. 3. 259.

*Quocunque aspiceret, lucus gemitusque sonabant,
Formaque non taciti funeris * instar erat.* * intus.

This is the same that Capitolinus calls Funus vulgare, when he reports, that Marcus Antoninus was so extremely kind and munificent, as to allow even vulgar Funerals to be kept at the Charge of the Publick. Propertius calls it Plebeium funus:

— — — — — Adfint
Plebei parvæ funeris exequiæ. Lib. 2. El. 13.
Aufonius: funus commune.

Tu gremio in proavi funus commune locatum.

(a) Cæp. 75. (b) Cæp. 3. (c) Lib. 47. (d) In Tiberio. (e) Lib. 43.
[Antiq. 12.]

And Suetonius, funus translatitium, when he informs us that Britannicus was buried after this Manner by Nero (a).

To the silent Funerals may be referred to the funera acerba, or untimely Obsequies of Youths and Children; which Juvenal speaks of, Sat. 11. 44.

Non præmaturi cineres, non funus acerbum Luxuriæ, &c.

And Virgil, Æn. 6. 427.

*Infantumque animæ fientes in limine primo:
Quos dulcis vitæ exortes & ab ubere raptos
Abstulit atra dies, & funere merfit acerba.*

The Funeral Ceremonies may be divided into such as were used to Persons when they were dying, and such as were afterwards performed to the dead Corpse.

When all Hopes of Life were now given over, and the Soul as it were just ready for its Flight, the Friends and nearest Relations of the dying Party were wont to kiss him, and embrace his Body 'till he expired. Thus Suetonius (b) relates that Augustus expired in the Kisses of Livia. Nor need there be any further Proof of a Custom, which every Body is acquainted with. The Reason of it is not so well known: Most probably, they thought by this pious Act to receive into their own Bodies the Soul of their departing Friend. Thus Albinovanus in the Epicede of Livia.

Lamina, & accipias hanc animam ore pio.*

For the Ancients believed that the Soul, when it was about leaving the Body, made Use of the Mouth for its Passage; whence animam in primo ore, or in primis labris tenere, is to be at Death's Door. And they might well imagine the Soul was thus transfused in the last Act of Life, who could fancy that it was communicated in an ordinary Kiss, as we find they did from these Love Verses, recited by Macrobius, the Original of which is attributed to Plato:

*Dum semibulco suavio
Meum pullum suavior,*

(a) Ner. 33.

(b) August 91.

*Dulcemque florem spiritus
 Duco ex aperto tramite,
 Animo tunc ægra & saucia
 Cucurrit ad labia mihi, &c. (a)*

Nor did they only kiss their Friends when just expiring, but afterwards too, when the Body was going to be laid on the Funeral Pile. Thus Tibullus, Lib. 1. Eleg. 1.

*Flebis & arfuro positum me, Delia, lecto,
 Tristibus & lacrymis oscula mixta dabis.*

And Propertius, Lib. 2. Eleg. 12.

*Osculaque in gelidis pones suprema labellis,
 Cum dabitur Syrio munere plenus onyx.*

Another Ceremony, used to Persons expiring, was the taking off their Rings. Thus Suetonius reports, "That when the Emperor Tiberius swooned away, and was reputed dead, his Rings were taken from him, though he afterwards recovered, and asked for them again (b)". They are much mistaken, who fancy him to have done this with Design to change his Heir; for though it was an usual Custom with the Ancients to constitute their Heir or Successor, by delivering him their Rings on their Death-bed, yet this signified nothing, in Case a legal Will was produced to the contrary (c).

But whether they took off the Rings to save them from the Persons concerned in washing and taking Care of the dead Body, or on any other Account, it is very probable that they were afterwards restored again to the Fingers, and burnt in the Funeral Pile, as may be gathered from the Verse of Propertius; where describing the Ghost of his Mistress in the Habit in which she was burned, he says,

Et solitum digito beryllon redderat ignis. Lib. 4. El. 7.

The Custom of closing the Eyes of a departing Friend; common both to the Romans and Græcians, is known by any one that has but looked in a Classic Author. It may only heré be observed, that this Ceremony was performed for the most Part by the nearest Relation, as by Husbands to their Wives, and by Wives to their Husbands, by Parents to their Children, and by Children to their Parents, &c. of all which we have a Multitude of Instances in the Poets. Pliny tells us, that as they closed the Eyes of the dying Persons, so they opened them too again when the Body was laid on the Funeral Pile: And his Reason for both Customs is, ut neque ab homine supremum spectari fas sit, & cælo non ostendi n. fas (a); because they counted it equally impious, that the Eyes should be seen by Men at their last Motion, or that they should not be exposed to the View of Heaven.

And for the Ceremonies used to Persons after they were dead, they may be divided into three Sorts, such as were performed before the Burial, such as concerned the Act of the Funeral, and such as were done after that Solemnity.

Before the Burial we meet with the Customs of washing and anointing the Corpse, not by any Means proper to the Romans, but anciently used by almost all the civilized Parts of the World, owing their first Rise to the Invention of the Egyptians. These Offices in Rome were either performed by the Women whom they termed Funerae; or else in richer or nobler Families by the Libitinarii, a Society of Men who got their Livelihood by preparing Things in order to the Solemnization of Funerals. They had their Name from Libitina, the Goddess who presided over Obsequies. Hence the Word Libitina is commonly used for Death itself; or for every Thing in general relating to the Funerals, because in the Temple of that Goddess, all Necessaries, proper on such Occasions, were exposed to Sale. Phædrus alludes to this Custom, speaking of a covetous Miser, Lib. 5. Fab. 77.

*Qui circumcides omnem impensam Funeris,
Libitina ne quid de tuo faciat lucrum.*

But to return to the Libitinarii, they seem to have been the chief Persons concerned in ordering Funerals, undertaking the whole Care and Charge of such Solemnity at a set Price; and therefore they kept a great Number of Servants to perform the working Part, such as the Polliniflores, the Vespillones, &c. The first of these were employed to anoint the dead Body, and the others we may chance to meet with hereafter. In Allusion to this Custom of anointing the Corpse, Martial (iii. 12.) plays very genteely on the Master of an Entertainment, where there was much Essence to be got, but very little Meat.

(a) Lib. 11. cap. 37

*Unguentum fateor bonum dedisti
Convivis, here; sed nihil scidisti.
Res falsa est bene olere & esurire.
Qui non cœnat, & unguitur, Fabulle,
Is vere mihi mortuus videtur.*

When the Body had been washed and anointed, they proceeded to wrap it in a Garment: The ordinary People for this Purpose made Use of the common Gown, and though in some Parts of Italy the Inhabitants were so rude as not to wear the Gown while they lived, yet Juvenal informs us that they did want it at their Death:

*Pars magna Italiæ est, si verum admittimus, in qua
Nemo togam sumit nisi mortuus. Sat. 3. 171.*

But those who had borne any publick Office in the State, or acquired any Honour in War, were after their Death wrapped in the particular Garment which belonged to their Place, or to their Triumph; as Livy (a) and Polybius (b) expressly report. It may here be observed, that the Ancients were so very careful and superstitious, in Reference to their Funeral Garments, that they often wove them for themselves and their Friends during Life. Thus Virgil brings in the Mother of Euryalus complaining.

—————*Nec te, tua funera, mater
Produxi pressive oculos, nec vulnera lavi
Veste tegens, tibi quam noctes festina diesque
Urgebam, & tela curas solabar aniles. Æn. ix. 486,*

If the Deceased had by his Valour obtained any of the honourable Coronets, it was constantly put on his Head, when the Body was dressed for the Funeral; that the Reward of Virtue might in some Measure be enjoy'd after Death, as Cicero observes in his second Book of Laws. Other Persons they crowned with Chaplets of Flowers, and with those too adorned the Couch on which the Body was laid. The primitive Christians inveighed severely against this Custom, as little less than Idolatry, as is to be seen particularly in Minutius Felix (c) and Tertullian (d).

(a) Lib. 38.
(d) De Corona Mil.

(b) Lib. 6.

(c) Octav. pag. 109. Edit. Oxon.

The next Ceremony that followed was the Collocatio or laying out of the Body, performed always by the nearest Relation: Whence Dio censures Tiberius for his Neglect of Livia, ἐπεὶ ποτὲ οὐκ ἐπισκευάσατο, ἢτε ἀποθανόντων αὐτὸς προέθηκε. He neither visited her, when she was sick, nor laid her out with his own Hands, after she was dead.

The Place where they laid the Body, was always near the Threshold, at the Entrance of the House:

———recipitque ad limina gressum
Corpus ubi exanimi positum Pallantis Acetes
Servabat senior: Æn. xi. 29.

And they took particular Care in placing the Body, to turn the Feet outward, toward the Gate, which Custom Perfius has left us elegantly described in his third Satyr, 103.

———tandemque beatulus alto
Compositus lecto, crassisque lutatus amomis,
In portam rigidos calces extendit———

The Reason of this Position was to shew all Persons, whether any Violence had been the Cause of the Party's Death, which might be discovered by the outward Signs.

We must not forget the Conclamatio, or general Out-cry set up at such Intervals before the Corp'se, by Persons who waited there on Purpose; this was done, either because they hoped by this Means to stop the Soul which was now taking its Flight, or else to awaken its Powers, which they thought might only lie silent in the Body without Action. For the first Reason we are beholden to Propertius: iv. 7.

At mihi non oculos quisquam inclamavit cuntes,
Unum impetrassem te revocante diem.

The other is taken from the Explication of this Custom by Servius, on the sixth of the Æneids, and seems much the more probable Design. For the Physicians gave several Instances of Persons, who being buried through Hastè, in an Apoplectic Fit, have afterwards come to themselves, and many Times miserably perished for Want of Assistance.

If all this Crying out signified nothing, the Deceased was said to be Conclamatur, or past Call, to which Practice there are are frequent Allusions in almost every Author. Lucan is very elegant to this Purpose,

——— Sic funere primo
Attonitæ tacuere domus, quum corpora nondum
Conclamator jacent, nec mater crine soluto
Exigit ad sævos famularum brachia planctus. Lib. 2.

There is scarce any Ceremony remaining which was performed before the Burial, except the Custom of sticking up some Sign, by which the House was known to be in Mourning. This among the Romans was done by fixing Branches of Cypress, or of the Pitch-tree, near the Entrance, neither of which Trees being once cut down ever revive, and have on that Account been thought proper Emblems of a Funeral (a).

Thus much was done before the Funeral; In the Funeral we may take Notice of the Elatio, or carrying forth, and the Act of Burial. What concerns the first of these will be made out in observing the Day, the Time, the Persons, and the Place. What Day after the Person's Death was appointed for the Funeral, is not very well agreed on. Servius on that Passage of Virgil, Æn. 5 Verse 65.

Præterea, si nona dies mortalibus ægris, &c.

expressly tells us, that the Body lay seven Days in the House, on the eighth Day was buried, and on the ninth the Relicks were buried. But there are many instances to prove that this set Number of Days was not always observed. Therefore perhaps this belonged only to the Indictive and Publick Funerals, and not to the private and silent, especially not to the acerba Funera, in which Things were always huddled up with wonderful Haste. Thus Suetonius reports of the Funeral of Britannicus (b), and of the Emperor Otho (c): And Cicero pro Cluentio, Ho ipse die puer eum hora undecima in publico et valens visus esset, ante noctem mortuus, et postridie ante lucem combustus.

As to the Time of carrying forth the Corpse, anciently they made Use only of the Night; as Servius observes on those Words of Virgil,

——— De more vetusto
Funeras rapuere faces.

Æn. 11. v. 142.

(a) Plin. lib. 16. cap. 33. Serv. ad Æn. 4. (b) Nar. 32. (c) Otho, 81.

The Reason he gives for it is, that hereby they might avoid meeting with the Magistrates or Priests, whose Eyes they thought would be defiled by such a Spectacle. Hence the Funeral had its Name a funalibus, from the Torches; and the Vespilliones, or Iesperones, were so called from Vesper the Evening.

Nothing is more evident, than that this Custom was not long observed, at least not in the Publick Funerals, though it seems to have continued in the silent and private, as Servius acquaints us in the same Place. Hence Nero took a fair Excuse for hurrying his Brother Britannicus's Body into the Grave, immediately after he had sent him out of the World. For Tacitus reports that the Emperor defended the hasty Burial which had caused so much Talk and Suspicion, in a publick Edict, urging that it was agreeable to the old Institutions, to hide such untimely Funerals from Mens Eyes, as soon as possible, and not detain them with the tedious Formalities of Harangues, and pompous Processions. It may not be too nice a Remark, that, in the more splendid Funerals, the former Part of the Day seems to have been designed for the Procession. Thus Plutarch relates of the Burial of Sylla, that, the Morning being very cloudy over Head, they deferred carrying the Corpse till the ninth Hour, or thirce in the Afternoon. But though this Custom of carrying forth the Corpse by Night, in a great Measure, ceased, yet the bearing of Torches and Tapers still continued in Practice. Thus Virgil in the Funeral of Pallas, Æn. 11. 144:

——— Intect via longo
Obduci flammam, & late discriminat agros.

And Perfius, Sat. 3. 103.

Hinc tula, candleæ, &c.

And, because Tapers were likewise used at the Nuptial Solemnity, the Poets did not fail to take the Hint for bringing them both into the same Fancy. As Propertius, Book 4. Eleg. last.

Fiximus insignes inter utramque facem.

And Ovid, in the Epistle of Cydippe to Acontius: 152.

Et, fœce pro thalami, fœx mihi mortis erat.

Among

Among the Persons concerned in carrying forth the Corpse, we may begin with those that went before the Funeral-Bed, such as the Siticiæ, the Præficæ, the Ludii, and Histriones, the new Freed men, the bearers of the Images, &c. The Name of Siticiæ A. Gellius (a) derives from Situs and Cano, from Singing to the Dead. They were of two Sorts, some founding on the Trumpet, others on the Flute or Pipe. That the Trumpets had a Share in this Solemnity, we learn from Virgil in the Funeral of Pallas, Æn. 11. 192.

Exoritur clamorque virum, clangorque tubarum.

And from Propertius, Book 2. Eleg. 7.

Ah! me, tum quales caneret tibi, Cynthia, somnos Tibia, funesta tibi illa tuba.

And Plutarch tells a notable Story of a Magpye, that, upon hearing the Trumpets at the Funeral of a rich Man, for some Time after quite lost her Voice, and could raise no Manner of Note; when on a sudden, as if she had been all this while deeply meditating on the Matter, she struck up exactly the same Tunes that the Trumpets had played, and hit all the Tunes and Changes to Admiration (b).

For it is likely that the Trumpets were used only in the Publick Funerals, to give the People Notice to appear at the Solemnity, as Lipsius instructs us (c).

The Tibicines were restrain to the Funerals of Children, and younger Persons, as Servius observes on the first of the Æneids, and Statius, Theb. 6. in the Funeral of Achemorus:

*Tum signum luctus cornu gravis mugis adunca
Tibia, cui tenero iunctum producere munes.*

The learned Dacier has lately declared himself of the same Opinion (d). But it is certain that this cannot always have held good. For Suetonius mentions the Tibiæ in the Funeral of Julius Cæsar (e), and Suetonius in that of Claudius, in his Apocolocyntosis. And Ovid says of himself in plain Words,

*Interea nostri quid agant nisi triste libelli?
Tibia funeribus convenit ista meis.* Trist. v. Eleg. 1.

(a) Lib. 20. cap. 2. (b) Phet. de Animal. Sæva. (c) De Aluitia, lib. 4. cap. 10. (d) Horac. Bonus 1. Sat. 6. v. 34. (e) Cap. 83.

Therefore

Therefore it seems more probable, that the Flutes or Pipes were used in all Sorts of Funerals, as the most accurate Kirchman has given his Judgment.

It appears from the Figures of Trumpets and Flutes on the old Monuments, that Instruments of those Kinds, used at Funeral Solemnities, were longer than the ordinary ones; and so fitted to give a sharper and more mournful Sound. Hence Ovid calls the Funeral Trumpet longa tuba.

Pro longa resonent carmina vestra tuba; Amor. 2. El. 6. 6.

After the Musicians went the Præfææ, or the Mourning-Women, hired on Purpose to sing the nania or lessus, the Funeral Song, filled with the Praises of the Deceased; but for the most Part trifling and mean. Hence the Grammarian in Gellius took his Flout against the Philosophers, Vos Philosophi mera estis (ut M. Cato ait) mortuaria Glossaria. Namque collegistis & lectitastis res tetras & inanes & frivolas, tanquam mulierum vocas præfæcarum (a): You Philosophers (as Cato says) are mere Dealers in Trash; for you go and collect a Parcel of dry worthless Stuff, just such for all the World as old Women whine out, who are hired to sing the Mourning Song at a Funeral.

That the Ludii and Histriones, the Mimicks and Players, went before the Funeral Bed, and danced after the Satyrick Manner, we have the Authority of Dionysius in his Ninth Book. Suetonius tells a Story of the Arch-mimick who acted at the Funeral of Vespasian (b).

The Custom for the Slaves to go with their Caps on before the Corpse, and to be thereupon made free, is confirmed by a Law of Justinian, and we meet with many Examples of it in History.

As to the Beds or Couches borne before in the Funeral Solemnity, the Design of these was to carry the waxen Images of the deceased Person's Ancestors; which were therefore used only in the Funerals of those who had the jus imaginum, the Right of keeping the Effigies of the Men of their Family, which at Home were set up in wooden Presses, and taken thence to be publicly shown after this Manner on the Death of any of their near Relations (c). Before the Corpse of Princes, or some extraordinary Persons, not only the Effigies of their Ancestors, but the Statues too of other great Men were borne in State. Thus Augustus ordered six hundred Beds of Images to be carried before, at the Funeral of Marcellus; and Sylla the Dictator had no less than six thousand (a).

(a) A. Gell. lib. 13. cap. 7. (b) Cato. 19. (c) Flov. N. H. lib. 25. cap. 2. the 17.

Besides all this, such as had been eminent for their Achievements in War, and gained any considerable Conquest, had the Images and Representations of the Enemies they had subdued, or the Cities they had taken, or the Spoils won in Battle; as Dionysius (b) reports in the Funeral of Coriolanus, and Dio (c) in that of Augustus. This Custom Virgil alludes to in the Funeral of Pallus: xi. 78.

Multaque præterea Laurentis præmia pugnae Aggerat, & longo prædam jubet ordine duci.

And a little after;

*Indutosque jubet truncos hostilibus armis
Ipsos ferre duces, inimicaque nomina figi.*

The Lictors too made a Part of the Procession, going before the Corps to carry the Fasces, and other Ensigns of Honour, which the Deceased had a Right to in his Life-time. It is very remarkable, that the Rods were not now carried in the ordinary Posture, but turned quite the contrary Way, as Tacitus reports in the Funeral of Germanicus (d). Hence Albinovanus in the Funeral of Drusus:

*Quos primum vidi fasces, in funere vidi,
Et vidi versos, indiciumque mali.*

We may now go on to the Persons who bore the Bier, or the Funeral Bed; and these were for the most Part the nearest Relations, or the Heirs of the Deceased. Hence Horace, Book 2. Sat. 5.

—————Cadaver—————

And Juvenal, Sat. 10. 258.

*Incalami Troja, Priamus venisset ad umbras

Thus they report of Mitellus who conquered Macedon, that he was carried to the Funeral Pile by his four Sons: one of which was the Prætor, the other three had been all Consuls, who had triumphed, and one performed the Office of Censor (a).

Sometimes Persons who had deserved highly of the Commonwealth, were borne at their Funerals by the Magistrates, or the Senators, or the chief of the Nobility, Thus Plutarch relates of Numa; Suetonius of Julius Cæsar (b); and Tacitus of Augustus (c). And the very Strangers and Foreigners, that happened to be at Rome at the Death of any worthy Person, were very desirous of signifying their Respects to his Memory, by the Service of carrying the Funeral-Bed, when he was to be buried: As Plutarch tells us in the Funeral of Paulus Æmilius, that as many Spaniards, Ligurians, and Macedonians as happened to be present at the Solemnity, that were young and of vigorous Bodies, took up the Bed, and bore it to the Pile.

Persons of meaner Fortunes, and sometimes great Men too; if they were hated by the People, were carried to their Burial by the Vespilliones or Sandapillones, who lived by this Employment. Thus Suetonius (d) and Eutropius (e) relate of the Emperor Domitian. Therefore in this last Way of bearing out, we may suppose them to have used the Sandapila or common Bier, as in the former Leclitæ or Lecliti, the Litters or Beds. This Bier is is what Horace and Lucan call viliis Arca:

——— *Angustis ejecta cadavera cellis
Conseruus vili portandæ locabat in arca.* Hor. L. 1. S. 8.

*Dix vilem Magno plebei funeris arcam,
Quæ lacrum corpus secos fundat in ignes.* Luc. L. 8.

It is worth observing, that sometimes the Bier or Bed was covered; and sometimes not. It was exposed often, if the

(a) Clin. lib. 47. cap. 4. Val. Max. lib. 7. (b) Cap. 34. (c) Annal. 1. (d) Cap. 17. (e) Lib. 7.

Party had died a natural Death, and was not very much deformed by the Change, and therefore now and then they used to paint the Face, especially of Women, to make them appear with more Advantage to the Sight. Dio tells us in the Life of Nero, that he daubed the Body of Britannicus over with a Sort of White-wash, to hinder the Blueness of the Flesh, and such other Marks of the Poison, from being discovered; but a great Rain, falling at the Time of the Procession, washed off the Paint, and exposed the fatal Tokens to the View of the whole People.

But in case the Visage was very much distorted; or upon some other Account not fit to be shewn, they threw a Covering over the Bed. Thus Paterculus reports that Scipio Africanus was carried forth to the Burial velato capite (a). Sometimes too when the Face or the Head had been miserably bruised; as if the Fall of a House, or some such Accident, had occasioned the Party's Death, they used to inclose the Head and Face in a Masque, to hinder them from appearing; and the Funerals in which this was practised, they termed larvata funera.

But the greatest Part of the Persons were those that followed the Corpse. These in private Funerals were seldom many besides the Friends and Relations of the Deceased; and it was very usual in a Will, to bestow Legacies upon such and such Persons, upon Condition they should appear at the Funeral, and accompany the Corpse. But at the Indulive or publick Funerals, the whole City flocked together upon the general Invitation and Summons. The Magistrates and Senators were not wanting at the Procession, nor even the Priests themselves, as we find in the Funeral of Numa described by Plutarch.

To give an Account of the Habit and Gesture of the Mourners, or of the Relations and others that followed the Corpse, is in a great Measure unnecessary; for the Weeping, the bitter Complaints against the Gods, the letting loose the Hair, or sometimes cutting it off, the changing the Habit, and the laying aside the usual Ornaments, are all too well known to need any Explication. Yet there are many Things singular in these Subjects which deserve our further Notice. Thus they did not only tear or cut off their Hair, but had a Custom to lay it on the Breast, or sometimes on the Tomb of the deceased Friend. Hence Ovid of the Sisters of Narcissus:

(a) Lib. 2.

————— Planxere sorores
Naiades, & seclos fratri imposuere capillos,

And Statius, Theb. 7.

————— Tergoque & pectore fusam

Obnubit tenua ora comis—————

It is no less observable, that, at the Funerals of their Parents, the Sons were covered on their Heads, and the Daughters uncovered: Perhaps only to recede as far as possible from their ordinary Habit. Yet it is likely that, in ordering their Sons to cover their Heads at such Solemnities, they had Regard to the common Practice of always wearing something on their Heads when they worshipped the Gods, and, especially when they were present at a Sacrifice. The Original and Grounds of this Superstition are most admirably given by Virgil, in the Prophet Helenus's Instructions to Aeneas:

Quin ubi transmissæ steterint trans æquora classes,
Et positis aris, jam vota in littore solves,
Purpureo velare comas adpertus amictu:
Nequa inter sanctos ignes in honore deorum
Hostilis faciès occurrat, & omnia turbet.
Hunc socii morem sacrorum, hunc ipse teneto,
Hac casti maneant in religione nepotes. Æn. 3. 403.

As to the Mourning Habits, it has been already observed (a) that the Senators sometimes on these Occasions went attired like Knights, the Magistrates like Senators, &c. and that the common Wear for Mourning was black. But we may further remark, that though this was the ordinary Colour to express their Grief, used alike by both Sexes; yet after the Establishment of the Empire, when Abundance of Party-Colours came in Fashion, the old primitive White grew to much into Contempt, that at last it became proper to the Women for their Mourning Cloths. Thus Statius in the Tears of Hetruscus.

Huc vittata comam niveoque insignis amictu
Milibus exequis ades.

And though it may with some Reason be thought that the Poet here, directing his Speech to the Goddess Pietas, gives her that Habit rather as a Mark of Purity and Innocence, than as the proper Badge of Grief in her Sex; yet the Matter of Fact is still evident from the Authority of Plutarch, who states this as the Subject of one of his Problems, and gives several Reasons for the Practice.

After the PERSONS follows the PLACE whither the Procession was directed, by which we must be guided in our next Enquiry. In all the Funerals of Note, especially in the Publick or Indiétive, the Corpse was brought with a vast Train of Followers into the Forum. Thus Horace, Book 1. Sat. 6.

— *At hic si plaustra ducenta,
Concurrantque foro tria funera, magna sonabit
Cornua quod vincatque tubas.*

Here one of the nearest Relations ascended the Rostra, and obliged the Audience with an Oration in Praise of the Deceased. If none of the Kindred undertook the Office, it was discharged by some of the most eminent Persons in the City for Learning and Eloquence; as Appian reports of the Funeral of Sylla (a). And Pliny the younger reckons it as the last Addition to the Happiness of a very great Man, that he had the Honour to be praised at his Funeral by the most eloquent Tacitus, then Consul (b); which is agreeable to Quintilian's Account of this Matter, Nam & funebres, &c. For the Funeral Orations (says he) depend very often on some publick Office, and by Order of the Senate are many Times given in Charge to the Magistrates to be performed by themselves in Person (c).

The Invention of this Custom is generally attributed to Papirius Paplicola, soon after the Expulsion of the Regal Family. Plutarch tells us that honouring his Colleague's Obsequies with a Funeral Oration, it so pleased the Romans, that it became customary for the best Men to celebrate the Funerals of great Persons with Speeches in their Commendation.

Nor was this Honour proper to one Sex alone, for Livy reports, that the Matrons, upon Account of making a Collection of Gold for the Deliverance of Rome from the Gauls, were allowed as a signal Favour to have Funeral Panegyrics in the same Manner as the Men. Plutarch's Relation of this Matter differs from Livy only in the Reasons of the Custom: "He acquaints us, that when it was agreed after the Taking of Veli, that a Bowl of Massy Gold should be made and sent

(a) Epigr. lib. 1. (b) Lib. 1. Epist. 1. (c) Institut. lib. 3. cap. 9.

“ to Delphi, there was so great a Scarcity of Gold, and the “ Magistrates so puzzled in considering how to get it, that the “ Roman Ladies meeting together, and consulting among “ themselves, out of the golden Ornaments that they wore, “ contributed as much as went to the making the Offering,
 “ which in Weight came to Eight Talents of Gold. The Se“ nate, to give them the Honour they had deserved, ordained “ that Funeral Orations should be used at the Obsequies of “ Women as well as of Men, which had never been a Custom “ before.” But it seems probable, that this Honour was at first only paid to aged Matrons; since we learn from the same excellent Author, that there was no Precedent of any Funeral Oration on a younger Woman, ’till Julius Caesar first made one upon the Death of his own Wife.

Cicero (a) and Livy (b) complain very much of this Custom of Funeral Speeches, as if they had conducted in a great Measure to the Corruption and Falsifying of History. For it being ordinary on those Occasions to be directed more by the Precepts of Oratory, than by the true Matter of Fact, it usually happened, that the deceased Party was extolled on the Account of several noble Achievements to which he had no just Pretensions:
 And especially when they came to enquire into their Stock and Original, as was customary at these Solemnities, they seldom failed to clap in three or four of the most renowned Persons of the Commonwealth to illustrate the Family of the Deceased; and so by Degrees well nigh ruined all proper Distinctions of Houses and Ill od.

The next Place to which the Corpse was carried, was the Place of Burning and Burial. It has been a Custom amongst most Nations to appoint this without the City, particularly among the Jews and Greeks; from whom it may be supposed to have been derived down to the Romans. That the Jews buried without the City, is evident from several Places of the New Testament. Thus the Scripture, in which Joseph laid our Sa-viour’s Body, was in the same Place in which he was crucified (c) which was near to the City (d). And we read in St. Matthew, that at our Lord’s Passion the Graves were opened, and many Bodies of the Saints which slept arose, and came out of their Graves, after his Resurrection, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many (e).

As to the Greacians, Servius in an Epistle to Tully (f), giving an Account of the unhappy Death of his Collegue

(a) 1. de Officiis. (b) L. 2. c. 2. (c) John xix. 41. (d) John xix. 40.
 (e) Matthew xxiii. 29, 33. (f) Tam. lib. 4. l. 1. p. 12.

Marcellus, which fell out in Greece, tells him, that he could not by any Means obtain Leave of the Athenians to allow him a Burying-place within the City, they urging a religious Restraint in that Point, and the Want of Precedents for such a Practice.

The Romans followed the same Custom from the very first Building of the City, which was afterwards settled in a Law by the Decemviri, and often revived and confirmed by several later Constitutions. The Reason of this ancient Practice may be resolved into a sacred and a civil Consideration. As to the former, the Romans, and most other People, had a Notion, that whatever had been consecrated to the supernal Gods, was presently defiled upon the Touch of a Corpse, or even by bringing such a Spectacle near it. Thus A. Gellius tells us, that the Flamen Dialis might not on any Account enter into a Place where there was a Grave; or so much as touch a dead Body (a). And, if the Pontifex Maximus happened to praise any one publicly at a Funeral, he had a Veil always laid over the Corpse to keep it from his Sight; as Dio reports of Augustus (b), and Seneca of Tiberius (c). It is likely that this might be borrowed from the Jewish Law, by which the High-Priest was forbid to use the ordinary Signs of Mourning, or to go in to any dead Body (d).

The civil Consideration seems to have been, that neither the Air might be corrupted by the Stench of putrefied Bodies, nor the Buildings endangered by the Frequency of Funeral Fires.

The Places then appointed for Burial without the City were either private or publick; the private Places were the Fields or Gardens belonging to particular Families. Hence Martial took the Jest in one of his Epigrams, on a Gentleman that had buried several Wives :

Septima jam, Phileros, tibi conditur uxor in agro.
Plus nulli, Phileros, quam tibi reddit ager.

If it were possible, they always buried in that Part of the Field or Garden which lay nearest to the common Road, both to put Passengers in Mind of Mortality, and to save the best Part of their Land. Thus Juvenal, Sat. 1.

—Experiar quid concedatur in illos,
Quorum Flaminia tegitur cinis, atque Latina.

(a) Lib. 10. cap. 15.
 (d) Levit. xlii. 10, 11.

(b) Lib. 54.

(c) Consulat. ad Mar. cap. 51.

And we have scarce any Relation of a Burying in Authors, but they tell us the Urn was laid near such a Way. Propertius is very earnest in desiring that he may not be buried after this ordinary Custom, near a celebrated Road, for Fear it should disturb his Shade :

Di faciant, mea ne terra locet ossa frequenti,

Qua facit assiduo tramite vulgus iter.

Post mortem tumuli sic infamantur amantum :

Me tegat arborea devia terra coma.

Aut humor ignotæ cumulis vallatus arenæ ;

Non juvat in media nomen habere via. Lib. 3. Eleg. 16.

The publick Burying-places were of two Sorts; those which were allotted to the Poor, and those which were put to this Use only at the Funerals of great Persons. The former were the Puticulæ, or Puticuli, without the Esquilian Gate; they contained a great Quantity of Ground, and were put to no other Use, than the burying of the Bones and Ashes of Persons of the lowest Rank, who had no private Place of their own to lay the Corpse in. But because the vast Number of Bones deposited here, infecting the Air, rendered the neighbouring Parts of the City unhealthy, Augustus gave away a great many Acres of this common Field to his Favourite Mæcenat, who turned it into fine Gardens. This Horace tells us at large, Book 1. Sat. 8.

Huc prius angustis ejecta cadavera cellis

Conservus vili portanda locabat in arca :

Hoc miseræ plebi stabat commune sepulchrum, &c.

The publick Place assigned for the Burial of great Persons was commonly the Campus Martius. This Honour could not be procured but by a publick Decree of Senate, and was never conferred but on Men of the highest Stations and Merits. Thus Plutarch relates of Lucullus and Pompey; Appian of Sylla (a), Suetonius of Drusus (b), and Virgil of Marcellus :

Quantos ille virum magnam Mavortis ad urbem

Campus aget gemitus? vel quæ, Tiberine, videbis

Funera, cum tumulum præterlabere recentem! Æn. 6.

(a) *Εμ-φολ. lib. 1.

(b) Claud. cap. 1.

It has been said, that the ordinary Custom was to bury without the City, but we must except some Sepulchres, as those of the Vestal Virgins, whom Servius tells us the Laws allowed a Burying-place within the City (a). The same Honour was allowed to some extraordinary Persons, as to Valerius Poplicola (b), and to Fabricius (c), being to continue to their Heirs. Yet none of the Family were afterwards there interred, but, the Body being carried thither, one placed a burning Torch under it, and then immediately took it away; as an Attestation of the Deceased's Privilege, and his receding from his Honour. And then the Body was removed to another Place.

Cicero in his ninth Philippick moves, that Servius Sulpicius, upon Account of his many signal Services to the Commonwealth, may be honoured with a publick Sepulchre in the Campus Esquilinus, or in any other Place where the Consul should please, thirty Feet in Dimension every Way, and to remain to his Heirs and Posterity. But there are not many Instances of the like Practice.

Having done with the Carrying forth, we come to the Act of Burying. The Corpse being brought, in the Manner already described, without the City, if they designed to burn it, was carried directly to the Place appointed for that Purpose (which, if it was joined with the Sepulchre, was called Bustum; if separate from it, Ustrina) and there laid on the Regus or Pyla, a Pile of Wood prepared to burn it on. This Pile was built in the Shape of an Altar, differing in Height according to the Quality of the Deceased. Thus Virgil in the Funeral of Misenus, Æn. 6.

——— Aramque sepulchri
Congerere arboribus, cœloque educere certant.

And Ovid against Ibis :

Et dare plebeio corpus inane rogo.

The Trees which they made Use of were commonly such as had most Pitch or Rosin in them; and, if they took any other Wood, they split it, for the more easy catching Fire:

Procumbunt piceæ, sonat iusta securibus ilex.

(a) Ad. Æn. 9.

(b) Plutarch in his Life,
L 2

(c) Cicero.
Fraxineæque

*Fraxineæque trabes; cunctis & fissile robur
Scinditur.——Virg. Æn. 6.*

Round about the Pile they used to set a Parcel of Cypress Trees, perhaps to hinder the noisome Smell of the Corpse. This Observation is owing to Virgil in the same Place :

*Ingentem struxere pyram; cui frondibus atris
Intexunt latera, & ferales ante cupressos Constituunt.*

That the Body was placed on the Pile, not by itself, but together with the Couch or Bed, on which it lay, we have the Authority of Tibullus, Book I. El. I.

Flebis & arfuro positum me, Delia, lecto.

This being done, the next of Blood performed the Ceremony of lighting the Pile; which they did with a Torch, turning their Face all the while the other Way, as if it was done out of Necessity, and not willingly. Thus Virgil, Æn. 6.

—————Subjacetam, more parentum, Aversi tenuere facem.

As soon as the Wood took Fire, they wished and prayed for a Wind to assist the Flames, and hasten the Consuming of the Body, which they looked on as a fortunate Accident. Thus Cynthia in Propertius :

Cur ventos non ipse rogis, ingratis, petisti ?

And Plutarch in the Life of Sylla reports, “ That, the Day “ being cloudy over Head, they deferred carrying forth the “ Corpse ’till about three in the Afternoon, expecting it would “ rain : But a strong Wind blowing full against the Funeral “ Pile, and setting it all on a Flame, his Body was consumed “ in a Moment. As the Pile shrunk down, and the Fire was “ upon going out, the Clouds showered down, and continued “ raining ’till Night. So that his good Fortune was firm even “ to the last, and did, as it were, officiate at his Funeral.”

At the Funerals of the Emperors, or renowned Generals, as soon as the Wood was lighted, the Soldiers and all the Company

pany made a solemn Course (Décursio) three Times round the Pile, to show their Affection to the Deceased; of which we have numerous Examples in History. Virgil has not forgot to exprefs this Custom :

*Ter circum accensos cinēi fulgentibus armis
Decurrere rogo; ter mæstum funeris ignem
Lustravere in equis, ululatusque ore dedesse.* Æn. 11.

The Body never burnt without Company; for, because they fancied that the Ghosts delighted in Blood, it was customary to kill a great Number of Beasts, and throw them on the Pile :

*Multa boum circa mæstantur corpora morti;
Setigerasque fues, raptasque ex omnibus agris
In flammam jugulant pecudes,——* Virg. Æn. 11.

In the more ignorant and barbarous Ages, they used to murder Men, and cast them into the Funeral Flames of Princes and Commanders. The Poets never burn a Hero without this inhuman Ceremony. Homer gives Patroclus

Δώδεκα μὲν Τρώων μεγάρων υἱᾶς ἰσθλῆς.

And Virgil, lib. 10.

*Quatuor hic juvenes, totidem, quos educat Ufens, Viventes rapit; inferias quos immolet umbris,
Captivæque rogi perfundat sanguine flammæ.*

But, besides those, there were Abundance of Presents thrown into the fatal Flames, of several Sorts: These consisted for the most Part of costly Garments and Perfumes thrown on the Body as it burned. Thus Virgil, Æn. 6.

Purpureasque super vestes, velamina nota Conjiciunt.

And Plutarch makes the extravagant Expences of Cato Junior, at the Funeral of his Brother Cæpio, to have been taken up in a vast Quantity of costly Garments and Perfumes.

All the precious Gums, Essences, and Balsams, that the Ancients were acquainted with, we find employed in their Funerals :

Funerals: Hence Juvenal describes a Fop that used Abundance of Effence,

*Et matutino sudans Crispinus amomo,
Quantum vix redolent duo funera*——Sat. 4.

The Soldiers and Generals had usually their Arms burnt with them on the Pile. Thus Virgil in the Funeral of Misenus:

——Decorantque super fulgentibus armis. Æn. 6.

And in another Place he adds the Spoils taken from the Enemy:

*Hinc alii spolia occisis direpta Latinis
Conjiciunt igni, galeas ensesque decoros,
Frænæque ferventesque rotas: pari, munera nota,
Ipforum clypeos, & non felicia tela.* Æn. 11.

When the Pile was burnt down, they put out the Remains of the Fire, by sprinkling Wine, that they might the more easily gather up the Bones and Ashes:

*Postquam collapsi cineres, ac flamma quivrit,
Reliquias vino & bibulam lavere favillam.* Virg. Æn. 6.

This gathering up the Bones and Ashes, and putting them into the Urn, was the next Office paid to the Deceased, which they termed offlegium. The whole Custom is most fully and elegantly described by Tibullus in his Third Book. Eleg. 2.

Ergo ubi cum tenuem, &c.

How the Ashes and Bones of the Man came to be distinguished from those of the Beasts, and Wood, and other Materials, is not easy to be conceived, unless we suppose the Difference to have arose from the artificial Placing of the Corpse on the Pile, so that every Thing else should fall away on each Side, and leave the Human Relicks in a Heap by themselves.

Nothing now remained but to put the Urn into the Sepulchre, and so sprinkle the Company with Holy Water, and dismiss them, Virg. Æn. 6.

*Offique lecta caelo texit Choriæus abeno:
Idem ter socios pura circumtulit unda,*

Spargens

Spargens rore levi, & ramo felicitis olivæ, Lustravitque viros, dixitque novissima verba.

These novissima verba were either directed to the Deceased, or to the Company. The Form of Speech, with which they took Leave of the Deceased was, Vale, vale, vale, nos te ordine quo natura permiserit, cuncti sequemur. The Form, with which the Prætor dismissed the People, was ILICET, i. e. ire licet. As they went away, they had a Custom of wishing for light Earth, to lie on the Relicks, which they reckoned a great Happiness. Hence it is an usual Inscription on ancient Funeral Monuments, S. T. T. L. or Sit tibi terra levis.

To enquire into the Original of Sepulchres, their several Kinds and Forms, the Variety of Ornaments, the Difference of Inscriptions, and the many Ways of violating the Tombs of the Dead, would be too nice a Disquisition for the present Design. Yet we must not pass by the Cænotaphia or Monuments erected on a very singular Account, either to Persons buried in another Place, or to those who had received no Burial, and whose Relicks could not be found.

Thus Suetonius tells us, that the Soldiers in Germany raised an honorary Tomb to the Memory of Drusus, though his Body had been carried to Rome, and deposited in the Campus Martius (a). And we often find the Generals raising Tombs to the Honour of those Soldiers whose Bodies could not be found after a Fight. These Tumuli inanes or honorarii, when erected to the Memory of particular Persons, were usually kept as sacred as the true Monuments, and had the same Ceremonies performed at them. Thus Virgil describes Andromache keeping the Anniversary of Hector's Death. Æn. 3.

*Solennes tum forte dapes & tristia dona
Libabat cineri Andromache, manesque vocabat
Hectoreum ad tumulum, viridi quem cespitem inanem,
Et geminas, causam lachrymis, sacraverat aras.*

And Æneas tells Deiphobus, that he has paid him such an Honour :

*Tunc Egomet tumulum Rhæteo in litore inanem
Constitui, & magna manes ter voce vocavi:
Nomen & arma locum servant.*

Æneid. 6.

(a) Sueton. Claud. cap. 1.

AFTER the FUNERAL, we are to take Notice of the several Rites performed in Honour of the Dead, at the Festivals instituted with that Design. The chief Time of paying these Offices was the Feralia, or the Feast of the Ghosts in the Month of February; but it was ordinary for particular Families to have proper Seasons of discharging this Duty, as the Novennalia, the Decennalia, and the like. The Ceremonies themselves may be reduced to these three Heads, Sacrifices, Feasts, and Games; to which if we subjoin the Customs of Mourning, and of the Consecration, we shall take in all that remains on this Subject.

The Sacrifices (which they called Inferiæ) consisted of Liquors, Victims, and Garlands. The Liquors were Water, Wine, Milk, Blood, and liquid Balsam:

*Hic duo rite mero libans carthesia Baccho
Fundit humi, duo lacte novo, duo sanguine sacro.* Virg. Æn. 5.

The Blood was taken from the Victims offered to the Manes, which were usually of the smaller Cattle, though in ancient Times it was customary to use Captives or Slaves in this inhuman Manner.

The Balsams and Garlands occur every-where in the Poets. Propert. Lib. 3. Eleg. 16:

*Afferet huc unguenta mihi, fertisque sepulchrum
Ornabit, custos ad mea busta sedens.*

Tibull. Lib. 2. Eleg. 4.

*Atque aliis senior, veteres veneratus amores,
Annua constructo setta dabit tumulo.*

Besides these Chaplets, they strowed loose Flowers about the Monument:

Purpureosque jacet flores, ac talia fatur. Æp. 5.

And again Æn. 6.

*Tu Marcellus eris. Manibus date lilia plenis:
Purpureo spargam flores; animamque nepotis
His saltem accumulatum donis, & jungar inani Munere.*

The Feasts, celebrated to the Honour of the Deceased, were either private or publick. The private Feasts were termed Silicernia, from Silex and Cæna, as if we should say Suppers made on a Stone. These were prepared both for the Dead and the Living. The Repast designed for the Dead, consisting commonly of Beans, Lettuces, Bread and Eggs, or the like, was laid on the Tomb for the Ghosts to come out and eat, as they fancied they would; and what was left they burnt on the Stone. Travellers tell us that the Indians at present have a superstitious Custom much of this Nature, putting a Piece of Meat always in the Grave with the dead Body, when they bury in the Plantations.

It was from this Custom, that, to express the most miserable Poverty of Creatures almost starved, they used to say, Such an one got his Victuals from the Tombs: Thus Catullus: 57.

*Uxor Meneni: sæpe quam in sepulchretis
Vidistis ipso rapere rogo cœnam,
Quam devolutum ex igne prosequens panem
A semiraso tunderetur ufore.*

And Tibullus's Curse is much to the same Purpose: i. 5.

*Ipse fame stimulante furens, herbasque sepulchris
Quærat, & a sævis ossa relicta lupis.*

The private Feasts for the Living were kept at the Tomb of the Deceased, by the nearest Friends and Relations only.

The publick Feasts were when the Heirs or Friends of some rich or great Person obliged the People with a general Treat to his Honour and Memory; as Cicero reports of the Funeral of Scipio Africanus (a) and Dio of that of Sylla (b). And Suetonius (c) relates that Julius Cæsar gave the People a Feast in Memory of his Daughter. There was a Custom on these Occasions to distribute a Parcel of raw Meat among the poor People, which they termed visceratio; though this was sometimes given without the Publick Feasts.

The Funeral Games have already been dispatched among the other Shows.

As to the Custom of Mourning, besides what has been before observed by the bye, we may further take Notice of the Time appointed for that Ceremony, and some of the most remarkable

(a) In Orat. pro Murrina.

(b) Lib. 37.

(c) Cap. 22.

Ways of expressing it. “Numa (as Plutarch tells us in his “Life) prescribed Rules for regulating the Days of Mourning, “according to certain Times and Ages. As for Example, a “Child of three Years, and so upwards to ten, was to be “mourned for so many Months as he was Years old. And the “longest Time of Mourning, for any Person whatsoever, was “not to exceed the Term of ten Months; which was also the “Time appointed unto Widows to lament the Loss of their “deceased Husbands, before which they could not, without “great Indecency, pass unto second Marriage: But, in case “their Incontinence was such as could not admit so long an “Abstinence from the nuptial Bed, they were to sacrifice a “Cow with a Calf, for Expiation of their Fault,”

Now Romulus's Year consisting but of ten Months, when Numa afterwards added two Months more, he did not alter the Time he had before settled for Mourning; and therefore though after that Time we meet with luctus annuus, or a Year's Mourning, used often upon the Death of some eminent Person, we must take it only for the old Year of Romulus, or the Space of ten Months.

There were several Accidents which often occasioned the concluding of a publick or private Mourning before the fixed Time; such as the Dedication of a Temple, the Solemnity of publick Games or Festivals, the solemn Lustration performed by the Censor, and the discharging any Vow made by a Magistrate or General; which, being Times of publick Rejoicing, would have otherwise implied a Contradiction.

As to the Tokens of private Grief, they had none but what are common to both Nations, as their keeping their House for such a Time, the avoiding all Manner of Recreations and Entertainments, and the like. But, in publick Mourning, it was a singular Custom to express their Concern by making the Term and all Business immediately to end, and settling a Vacation 'till such a Period, of which we have frequent Instances.

The last Ceremony designed to be spoken of, was Consecration. This belonged properly to the Emperors; yet we meet too with a private Consecration, which we may observe in our Way. This was, when the Friends and Relations of the Deceased canonized him, and paid him Worship in private; a Piece of Respect commonly paid to Parents by their Children, as Plutarch observes in his Roman Questions. Yet the Parents too sometimes conferred the same Honour on their deceased Children, as Cicero promiseth to do for his Daughter Tullia, in the End of his Consolation : and though that Piece be suspected, as we now have it, yet the present Authority loses nothing of its Force, being cited heretofore by Lactantius, according to the Copies extant in his Time.

The publick Consecration had its Original from the Deification of Romulus, but was afterwards discontinued 'till the Time of the Emperors, on most of whom this Honour was conferred. The whole Ceremony is most accurately described by Herodian, in his fourth Book, the Translation of which Place may conclude this Subject :

“ The Romans (says he) have a Custom to consecrate those “ Emperors who leave either Son's or designed Successors at “ their Death; and those who received this Honour are said to “ be enrolled among the Gods. On this Occasion the whole “ City maintains a publick Grief, mixed as it were with the “ Solemnity of a Festival. The true Body is buried in a very “ sumptuous Funeral, according to the ordinary Method. But “ they contrive to have an Image of the Emperor in Wax done “ to the Life; and this they expose to publick View, just at “ the Entrance of the Palace Gate, on a stately Bed of Ivory, “ covered with rich Garments of embroidered Work and Cloth
“ of Gold. So the Image lies there all pale, as if under a “ dangerous Indisposition. Round the Bed there sit, the greatest “ Part of the Day, on the Left Side, the whole Senate in Black;
“ on the Right, the aged Matrons, who, either upon Account
“ of their Parents or Husbands, are reputed noble. They wear
“ no Jewels or Gold, or other usual Ornaments, but are “ attired in close white Vests, to express thir Sorrow and “ Concern. This Ceremony continues seven Days together :
“ The Physicians being admitted every Day to the Bed, and “ declaring the Patient to grow all along worse and worse.
“ At last when they suppose him to be dead, a select Company
“ of young Gentlemen of the Senatorian Order take up the “ Bed on their Shoulders, and carry it through the Holy Way “ into the old Forum, the Place where the Roman Magistrates “ used to lay down their Offices. On both Sides there are “ raised Galleries with Seats one above another, one side be“ ing filled with a Choir of Boys all nobly descended, and of “ the most eminent Patrician Families; the other with a like “ Set of Ladies of Quality, who both together sing Hymns
“ and Pæans composed in very mournful and passionate Airs,
“ to the Praise of the Deceased. When these are over, they “ take up the Bed again, and carry it into the Campus Martius; “ where,

“ where, in the widest Part of the Field, is erected a four“ square Pile, intirely composed of large Planks, in the Shape
 “ of a Pavillion, and exactly regular and equal in the Di“ mensions. This in the Inside is filled up with dry Chips, “ but without is adorned with Coverlids of Cloth of Gold, and “ beautified with Pictures and curious Figures in Ivory.
 “ Above this is placed another Frame of Wood, much less in“ deed, but set off with Ornaments of the same Nature, and “ having little Doors or Gates standing about it. Over this are “ set a third and fourth Pile, every one being considerably less “ than that on which it stands; and so others perhaps, ’till
 “ they come to the last of all, which forms the Top. The Fi“ gure of this Structure, altogether, may be compared to those “ Watch-Towers, which are to be seen in Harbours of Note,
 “ and by the Fire on their Top direct the Course of the Ships “ into the Haven. After this, hoisting up the Body into the “ second Frame of Buildings, they get together a vast Quantity
 “ of all Manner of sweet Odours and Perfumes, whether of “ Fruits, Herbs, or Gums, and pour them in Heaps all about “ it; there being no Nation, or City, or indeed any eminent “ Men, who do not rival one another in paying these last Pre“ sents to their Prince. When the Place is quite filled with a “ huge Pile of Spices and Drugs, the whole Order of Knights “ ride in a solemn Procession round the Structure, and imitate
 “ the Motions of the Pyrrhic Dance. Chariots too, in a very “ regular and decent Manner, are drove round the Pile, having
 “ the Coachmen clothed in Purple, and bearing the Images of “ all the illustrious Romans, renowned either for their Counsels
 “ and Administration at Home, or their memorable Atchieve-“ ments in War. This Pomp being finished, the Successor to “ the Empire, taking a Torch in his Hand, puts it to the “ Frame, and at the same Time the whole Company assist in “ lighting it in several Places; when, on a sudden, the Chips
 “ and Drugs catching Fire, the whole Pile is quickly con“ sumed. At last, from the highest and smallest Frame of “ Wood, an Eagle is let loose, which, ascending with the “ Flames towards the Sky, is supposed to carry the Prince’s “ Soul to Heaven.”

CHAP. XI.

Of the ROMAN Entertainments.

THE peculiar Customs of the Romans, in Reference to Eating and Drinking, will easily fall under the three Heads, of the Time, the Place, and the Manner of their Entertainments. As to the first, the Romans had no proper Repast besides Supper, for which the ordinary Time was about the ninth Hour, or our Three o'Clock. Thus Martial, reckoning up the Business of every Hour, iv. 8.

Imperat extruētos frangere nona toros.

But the more frugal made this Meal a little before Sunset, in the Declension of the Day: To which Virgil might possibly allude, though speaking of the Customs of Carthage, and of its Queen, when he says,

Nunc eadem labente die convivium uerit. Æn. iv.

On the other Side, the Voluptuous and Extravagant commonly began their Feasts before the ordinary Hour. Thus Horace, Book 1. Od. 1.

Nec partem solido demere de die Spernit.

And Juvenal, Sat. 10.

Exul ab octava Marius bibit.

Those that could not hold out 'till Supper, used to break their Fast in some other Part of the Day, some at the second Hour, some at the fourth, answering to our eight and ten; some at the sixth, or about Noon; others at the eighth, or our two, as their Stomachs required, or their Employments gave them Leave. At this Time they seldom eat any Thing but a Bit of dry Bread, or perhaps a few Raisins or Nuts, or a little Honey. From the different Hours of taking this Breakfast, it is likely that the jentaculum, prandium, merenda, &c. had their Original, being really the same Repast made by several Persons at several Times (a).

(a) Dacier on Horace, Book 1. Od. 1.

The PLACE, in which the Romans eat, was anciently called Cœnaculum. Seneca, Suetonius, and others, style it Cœnatio. But the most common Appellation, which they borrowed from the Græcians, was Triclinium. Servius on the first of the Æneids, at that Verse,

Aurea composuit sponda mediumque locavit, takes an Occasion to reprehend those Grammarians who will have Triclinium to signify a Room to sup in, and not barely a Table. Yet (to omit a tedious Number of Citations from other Authors) Tully himself useth the Word in that Sense: For in one of his Epistles he tells Atticus (a), that, when Cæsar came to Philippi, the Town was so full of Soldiers as to leave Cæsar scarce a Triclinium to sup in.

Anciently the Romans used to sup sitting, as the Europeans at present, making Use of a long Table.

Perpetuis soliti patres consistere mensis. Virg. Æn. 8.

Afterwards the Men took up a Custom of lying down, but the Women for some Time after still kept sitting, as the most decent Posture (b). The Children too of Princes and Noblemen, for the same Reason, used to sit at the Backs of Couches (c), whence, after a Dish or two, they withdrew, without causing any Disturbance. Yet as to the Women, it is evident, that in after Times they used the same Posture at the Table as Men. Thus Cicero in an Epistle to Pætus, telling him of one Chyteris, a Gentlewoman that was lately at a Treat with him, makes use of the Word accubuit. And Ovid, in his fourth Love-Elegy of the first Book, adviseth his Mistress about her Carriage at the Table before her Husband,

*Cum premet ille torum, vultu comes ipsa modesto
Ibis, ut accumbas.*—————

And Suetonius relates, that, at an Entertainment of the Emperor Caligula, he placed all his Sisters one by one below himself, uxore supra cubante, his Wife lying above him.

When they began thus to lie down, instead of sitting at Meat, they contrived a Sort of Beds or Couches of the same Nature with those on which they slept, but distinguished from them by the Name of Leſti tricliniorum, or tricliniæres, the other being called leſti cubicularii.

(a) Lib. 15. Epist. 50. (b) Pal. Max. lib. 2. cap. 1. (c) Tacitus, Ann. 13. Suetonius Claud. cap 32.

They were made in ſeveral Forms, but commonly four-square, ſometimes to hold three or four, ſometimes two Perſons, or only one. Yet, in the ſame Entertaining Room, it was obſerved to have all the Couches of the ſame Shape and Make. After the round Citron-Tables grew in Faſhion, they changed the three Beds (which denominated the Triclinium) for the Stibadium, one ſingle large Couch in the Shape of a Half-Moon, or of the Græcian Sigma, from which it ſometimes borrowed its Name, as in Martial:

Accipe lunata ſcriptum teſtudine ſigma.

Theſe Stibadia took their ſeveral Names from the Number of Men that they had, as the Hexaclino for Six, the Heptaclino for Seven, and ſo on.

The higher the Beds were, the more noble and ſtately, and the more decent too they were thought. Hence Virgil, Æn. 2.

Inde toro pater Æneas ſic orſus ab alto.

And again, Æn. 6.

—————Lucent genialibus altis
Aurea fulcra toris.—————

On the contrary, low Couches were looked on as ſo extremely ſcandalous, that (Valerius Maximus tells the Story) one Ælius Tubero, a Man of great Integrity, and of very noble Progenitors, being a Candidate for the Prætorſhip, loſt the Place, only for making Uſe of a low Sort of Supping-Beds, when he gave People a publick Entertainment (a).

On the Beds they laid a Kind of Ticks or Quilts, ſtuffed with Feathers, Herbs, or Tow; which they called Calcitræ. Over theſe they threw in ancient Times nothing but Goat-Skins; which they afterwards changed for the ſtragula, the Coverlids or Carpets: Theſe we ſometimes find under the Name of toralia, on Account of their belonging to the torus. Thus in Horace,

—————Ne turpe toral, ne ſordida mappa
Corruget nars. Lib. 1. Epift. 5. 23.

(a) Val. Max. lib. 7. cap. 5.

And again.

Et Tyrias dare circum illota toralia vestes. Lib. 2. Sat. 4.

On the Carpets were laid Pulvini, or Pillows for the Guests to lean their Backs on.

It would be endle's to describe the Variety and Richness of the Furniture with which they set off their Tables. It will be enough to observe from Pliny, that, when Carthage was finally destroyed by Scipio Africanus, the whole Mass of Treasure found in that City which had so long contended for Riches, Glory and Empire, with Rome itself, amounted to no more than what, in Pliny's Time, was often laid out in the Furniture of a Table (a).

As to the Manner of the Entertainments, the Guests in the first Place bathed with the Master of the Feast, and then changed their ordinary Clothes for the vestis convivialis, or cœnatoria, a light Kind of Frock; at the same Time having their Soleæ pulled off by their Slaves, that they might not foul the fine Carpets and Furniture of the Beds. And now taking their Places, the first Man lay at the Head of the Bed, resting the Fore-part of his Body on his left Elbow, and having a Pillow or Bolster to prop up his Back. The next Man lay with his Head toward the Feet of the first, from which he was defended by the Bolster that supported his own Back, commonly reaching over to the Navel of the other Man; and the Rest after the same Manner. Being settled on the Beds, in the next Place they wash their Hands:

———Stratogue super discumbiter ostro;
Dant manibus famuli lymphas. Virg. Æn. 1.

After this they were served with Garlands, or Roses, and whatever other Flowers were in Season, which they did not wear only on their Heads, but sometimes too about their Necks and Arms. This too was the Time to present them with Essences and Perfumes.

The Number of Guests is by A. Gellius stated according to Varro, that they should not be fewer than three, or more than nine, to express the Number of the Graces or the Muses.

The most honourable Place was the middle Bed, and the Middle of that. Horace describes the whole Order of sitting in his eighth Satyr of the second Book:

Stimmus Ego, Et prope me Viscus Sabinus, Et infra,
Si memini, Varius: cum Servilio Bellatrone

(a) Nat. Hist. lib. 33. cap. 11.

Vibidius, quos Mæcenæ adduxerat umbras, Nomentanus erat super ipsum, Porcius infra.

So that infra aliquem cubare is the same as to lie in one's Bosom, as St. John is said to have done in our Saviour's; whence learned Men have thought, that either the same Custom was observed in almost all Nations, or else that the Jews, having been lately conquered by Pompey, conformed themselves in this, as in many other Respects, to the Example of their Masters.

At the Beginning of the Feast they lay on their Bellies, their Breasts being kept up with Pillows, that they might have both their Hands at Liberty; but towards the latter End, they either rested themselves on their Elbows, as Horace says, Languidus in cubitum jam se conviva reponet. Sat. ii. 4. 38.

And in another Place,

Et cubita remanete pressa. Carm. 1. Od. 27.

or, if they had not a Mind to talk; they lay all along; all which Postures are to be seen in the old Marbles, which present the Figure of an Entertainment.

They seem to have brought in the several Courses in Tables, and not by single Dishes; as Servius observes on that of Virgil, Æn. 1. 220.

Postquam prima quies epulis, mensæque remotæ.

But some will understand by mensæ in that Place rather the Dishes than the Tables, because it follows presently after,

Dixit, & in-mensa laticum libavit honorem.

unless we suppose that, as soon as the Table of Victuals was removed, another was set in its Place with nothing but Drink.

They wanted no Manner of Diversion while they were eating, having ordinarily Musick and antique Dances, and in ancient Times Combats of Gladiators.

Plutarch tells us, that Julius Cæsar, once in a Treat which he made for the People, had no less than twenty-two thousand Triclinia; which is enough to give an Idea of their public Entertainments.

Of the ROMAN Names.

C H A P. XII.

THE Roman Names, which many Times grievously puzzle ordinary Readers, may be divided into four Sorts, the Names of the Ingenui, or free-born, the Names of the freed Men and Slaves, the Names of Women, and the Names of adopted Persons.

The Ingenui had three several Names, the Praenomen, the Nomen, and the Cognomen. Hence Juvenal, Sat. v. 126.

———Si quid tentaveris unquam

Hiscere, tanquam habeas tria nomina———

The Praenomen answers to our Christian Names, but was not imposed till the assuming the Manly Gown. The Names of this Sort most in Use, together with the initial Letters which ordinarily stand for them in Writing, are as follow ;

A. Aulus, C. Caius, D. Decius, K. Cæse, L. Lucius, M. Mamilius and Marcus, N. Numerius, P. Publius, Q. Quintus, T. Titus.

AP. Appius, CN. Cnæus, SP. Spurius, TI. Tiberius, MAM. Mamercus, SER. Servius, SEX. Sextius.

The Nomen immediately followed the Praenomen, answering to the Græcian Patronymicks. For as among them the Posterity of Æacus had the Name Æacidae, so the Julian Family in Rome were so called from Iulus or Ajcanius. But there were several other Reasons which gave Original to some of the Praenomens, as living Creatures, Places, and Accidents, which are obvious in Reading.

The Cognomen was added in the third Place, on the Account of distinguishing Families, and was assumed from no certain Cause, but usually from some particular Occurrence. But this must be understood principally of the first Original of the Name, for afterwards it was hereditary, though frequently changed for a new one.

Grammarians usually add a fourth Name, which they call Agnomens, but this was rather an honourable Title ; as Cato was obliged with the constant Epithet of the Wise, Crassus of the Rich : And hence came the Africani, the Asiatici, the Macedonijci, donici, &c. Tully frequently uses Cognomen to signify these Appellations, and there is no need of being so scrupulous, as to express ourselves in these Cases by the fourth Word.

The Slaves in ancient Times had no Name but what they borrowed from the Prænomen of their Masters, as Lucipor, Publipor, Marcipor, as much as to say, Lucii puer, Publii puer, &c. (a). When this Custom grew out of Fashion, the Slaves were usually called by some proper Name of their own, sometimes of Latin, sometimes of Græcian Original; this was very often taken from their Country, as Davus, Syrus, Geta, &c. Upon their Manumission they took up the Prænomen and the Nomen of their Masters, but, instead of the Cognomen, made Use of their former Name; as Marcus Tullius Tiro, the freed Man of Cicero. After the same Manner it was customary for any Foreigner, who had been made a free Denizen of Rome, to bear the Nomen and the Prænomen of the Person, on whose Account he obtained that Privilege.

The Women had anciently their Prænomens as well as the Men, such as Caia, Cecilia, Lucia, &c. But afterwards they seldom used any other besides the proper Name of their Family, as Julia, Marcia, and the like. When there were two Sisters in a House, the distinguishing Term was Major and Minor: if a greater Number, Prima, Secunda, Tertia, Quarta, Quinta, or by Contraction, Secundilla, Quartilla, and Quintilla.

Adopted Persons assumed all three Names of him who obliged them with this Kindness, but, as a Mark of their proper Descent, added at the End either their former Nomen or Cognomen; the first exactly the same as before (as Q. Servilius Cepio Agalo Brutus, the Name of M. Junius Brutus, when adopted by Q. Servilius Cepio Agalo;) The other with some slight Alteration, as C. Octavius, when adopted by Julius Caesar, was C. Julius Caesar Octavianus.

Though the Right and the Ceremony of Adoption be a Subject properly belonging to the Notice of civil Lawyers; yet it cannot be amiss to give some little Hints about the Nature of that Custom in general. Every one knows the Meaning of the Word, and that to adopt a Person was to take him in the Room of a Son, and to give him a Right to all Privileges which accompanied that Title. Now the Wisdom of the Roman Constitution made this Matter a publick Concern.

(a) Quintilian, Institut, lib. 1. cap. 4. Plin, N. Hist. lib. 33. cap. 1.

When a Man had a Mind to adopt another into his Family, he was obliged to draw up his Reasons, and to offer them to the College of the Pontifices, for their Approbation. If this was obtained, on the Motion of the Pontifices, the Consul, or some other prime Magistrate, brought in a Bill at the Comitia Curiata, to make the Adoption valid. The private Ceremony consisted in buying the Person to be adopted of his Parents, for such a Sum of Money, formally given and taken; as Suetonius tells us Augustus purchased his Grandsons Caius and Lucius of their Father Agrippa.

Aulus Gellius makes a Distinction between Adoptio and Arrogatio, as if the former belonged only to the Care of the Prætor, and was granted only to Persons under Age; the latter to the Cognizance of the People, and was the free Act of Persons grown up, and in their own Power; but we learn from almost every Page of History, that the Romans were not so nice in their Practice as he is in his Observation.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the ROMAN Money.

IN enquiring into the Difference and Value of the Roman Coins, we may begin with the lowest Sort, that of Brass. The Æs then, or most ancient Money, was first stamped by Servius Tullius, whereas formerly it was distinguished only by Weight, and not by any Image. The first Image was that of Pecus, or small Cattle, whence it took the Name of Pecunia. Afterwards it had on one Side the Beak of a Ship, on the other a Janus; and such were the Stamps of the As; for as for the Triens, Quadrans, and Sextans, they had the Impression of a Boat upon them. A long Time did the Romans use this and no other Money, till after the War with Pyrrhus, A. U. C. 484, five Years before the first Punic War, Silver began to be coined. The Stamps upon the Silver Denarii are for the most Part Waggons with two or four Beasts in them on the one Side, and on the Reverse the Head of Rome, with an Helmet. The Victriciati have the Image of Victory sitting, the Septentii, usually Castor and Pollux on the one Side, and both on the Reverse the Image of the City; so the Custom continued during the Commonwealth.

monwealth. Augustus caused Capricorn to be set upon his Coin, and the succeeding Emperors ordinarily their own Effigies : Last of all came up Coin of Gold, which was first stamped, sixty-two Years after that of Silver, in the Consulship of M. Livius Salinator, with the same Stamp and Images. So much for the several Kinds of Money ; we may now proceed to the several Pieces under every Kind.

The As was so named quasi Æs, or Brass, being of that Metal, and at first consisted of 1 lb. Weight, till, in the first Punic War, the People, being greatly impoverished, made 6 Asses of the same Value out of one. In the second Punic War, Hannibal pressing very hardly upon them, and putting them to great Shifts, the Asses were reduced to an Ounce apiece ; and in Conclusion, by a Law of Papirius, were brought down to half an Ounce, and so continued. The As contained the tenth Part of the Denarius, and was in Value of our Money about ob. qua. The Semisses, or Semi-æs, half as much. The Triens was a third Part of the As, the Quadrans the fourth, by some called Triuncis and Teruncius, because it contained 3 Ounces, before the Value was diminished. The Sextans, or sixth Part, was that which every Head contributed to the Funeral of Menenius Agrippa, but these were not sufficient for Use, and therefore there were other Pieces made, as the Unica, or twelfth Part of the Pound, the Semuncia of the Weight of 4 Drachms, and the Sextula, or sixth Part of an Ounce. Vairo speaks too of the Decussis, in Value 10 Asses, or of a Denarius ; the Vicessis of two Denarii, and so upwards to the Centussis, the greatest Brass Coin, in Value 100 Asses, 10 Denarii, and of our Money 6 s. 3 d.

For the Silver Money, the old Denarius was so named, because it contained Denos Aëris or Asses, 10 Asses, tho' its Weight and Value was not at all Times alike ; for the old Roman Denarius, during the Commonwealth, weighed the seventh Part of an Ounce, and was in Value of our Money Ed. ob. q. with 1 c. but the Denarius, which came up in the Time of Claudius, or a little before, weighed exactly an Attic Drachm ; so that the Greek Writers, when they speak of it, for every Denarius mention a Drachm, which of our Money was worth 7 d. ob. Computations are generally made with Reference to this new Sort of Denarius ; if Respect be had to the ancient Times, then much the old one exceeded the new. When we meet with all Reckonings are to be increased one seventh Part, for just so much the old one exceeded the new. When we meet with Bigatus and Quadrigatus, we must understand the same Coin as the Denarius, so called from the Bigæ and Quadrigæ stamped upon it. There was another Coin called Victoriatus, from the Image of Victory upon it, first stamped in Rome by an Order of Clodius, in Value half a Denarius, and therefore named also Quinarius, as containing the Value of five Asses; it was worth of our Money 3*d. ob. q.* The next that follows, and which makes so much Noise in Authors, is the Sestertius, so called quasi sesquitercius, because it contained two Asses and a half; being half the Victoriatus, and a fourth Part of the Denarius. It is often called absolutely Nummus, because it was in most frequent Use, as also Sestertius Nummus; it was worth of our Money 1*d. ob. qu.* The Obolus was the sixth Part of the Denarius, equal to the Attick ὀβολός, as much as 1*d. qu.* with us. The Libella was the tenth Part of the Denarius, and equal in Value to the As; so called as a little Pound, being supposed equal to a Pound of Brass, worth of our Money, ob. qu. The Sembella, as is written Semi libella, was half this. And lastly, the Teruncius was the fortieth Part of the Denarius, so named, because it was worth three Ounces of Brass, being inconsiderable in Value, and next to nothing.

To come at last to the Golden Coins; those most remarkable were the Aurei Denarii, so termed either because they had the same Stamp as the Silver Denarii, or because in Bigness they much resembled them. The old Aureus stamped, during the Commonwealth, weighing two Silver Denarii; worth of our Money 17*s. 1 d. ob. qua.* The old Aureus, stamped about the Beginning of the Empire, was lighter than the former by one seventh Part, weighing two Drachms, worth about 15*s.* of our Money. Thus they continued Didrachmi for the Time of the first five Cæsars; and then lost much in their Weight by the Fraud and Avarice of the succeeding Princes. In Nero's Time they wanted a few Grains, under Galba a little more, under Nerva, Trajan, and Adrian, no fewer than eight; under Vespasian, and the like name Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius Severus, and others. Diocletian, indeed, had in his Reign restored to the Aurei their full Weight of two Drachms, and so did Aurelian afterwards, which was the last Regulation of the Matter, while Rome continued to be the Seat of the Empire.

The Marks of the ordinary Coins are as follow. The As, because at first it was a Pound Weight, is thus expressed, L. and the Sestertius, because it contained in Value two Pounds of Brass and a half, thus, HS. or LLS. The Mark of the Quinarius, or Victoriatus was Λ. and of the Denarius X. or 11:

The

The Sums in Use among the Romans were chiefly three; the Sestertium, the Libra, and the Talent. The Sestertium contained a thousand Sestertii, about 7*l.* 16*s.* and 3*d.* of our Money. We do not indeed find it in any ancient Author in the singular Number, as now it is used; but we very often meet with it in the Plural, though with the same Signification. In reckoning by Sesterces, the Romans had an Art, which may be understood by these three Rules; the first is, if a numeral Noun agree in Case, Gender, and Number, with Sestertius, then it denotes precisely so many Sestertii, as decem Sestertii, just so many; the second is this, if a numeral Noun of another Case be joined with the Genitive Plural of Sestertius, it denotes so many Thousand, as decem Sestertium signifies ten thousand Sestertii. Lastly, if the Adverb numeral be joined, it denotes so many hundred thousand, as decies Sestertium signifies ten hundred thousand Sestertii; or if the numeral Adverb be put by itself, the Signification is the same: Decies or Vigescies stand for so many hundred thousand Sestertii, or, as they say, so many hundred Sestertia.

The Libra, or Pound, contained twelve Ounces of Silver, or ninety-six Drachms, or later Denarii, and was worth of our Money 3*l.*

The third Sum was the Talent, which contained twenty-four Sestertia, and six thousand later Denarii, being the same with the Attick Talent; for the Names of Talent, Mina, and Drachma, the Romans took from the Greeks, as the Greeks borrowed from them the Libra and the Uncia. The Talent was worth of our present Money 187*l.* 10*s.*

We meet too with a lesser Sum, termed the Sportula, being what the rich Men gave to every one of their Clients, after having waited upon them in Publick, and now and then at other Times, as they pleased to appoint; it was in Value about a hundred Quadrantes, or 18*d.* ph. qua. Formerly instead of this Sum, they used to deal a Dole to the Clients without the Door, who received the Victuals in a little Basket made of a Kind of Broom, called Sportum.
